LAURISTON CASTLE
LIBRARY ACCESSION

ADDRESS.

MESSRS. PIGOT AND CO. in presenting this new edition of their 'DIRECTORY OF SCOTLAND' to the Public, feel it due to their Subscribers to assure them how gratefully they appreciate the extensive patronage by which their arduous labours have been rewarded: the Proprietors feel that the best acknowledgment they can make for this liberal support, is to point out a few of the augmentations and improvements by which they have endeavoured to deserve it.

The new Map of Scotland and that of the Isle of Man have been engraved on steel, with the most scrupulous care, and anxious diligence has been exercised to introduce all the new roads and railways. The topographical notices of the various Counties, Cities, Towns and Villages have been enlarged sufficiently for the introduction of all the principal circumstances for which the respective places are remarkable. In this department of their work the Proprietors have to record their obligations to many talented individuals who have courteously and beneficially contributed information of a valuable and interesting character. They are likewise not unwilling to acknowledge that they have drawn deeply from standard works upon the history of Scotland, in particular, relative to objects of antiquity as well as anecdotal. The present edition has been so extended as to include, among other additions, the Shetland Islands, with numerous other places which did not appear in their previous Directories. The three cities of Edinburgh, Glasgow and Aberdeen, and the manufacturing towns of Dundee and Paisley, have the names of their inhabitants given in separate alphabetical arrangement, as well as in the classified lists of their respective professions or trades, to which the former editions were limited. The Directories of the eight English Towns have been expressly compiled for the present work, with a view to facilitate the trading intercourse between the two countries.

The Proprietors, in conclusion, assure the Patrons of this Directory, that, undismayed either by expenditure or labour, they have pursued the several objects of their volume with a vigilant attention to accuracy; but, as in a work so voluminous and varied, no human effort can avoid occasional errors, they indulge in the hope that, whenever any are detected, their existence will be ascribed to the difficult nature of the work, and not to inattention on the part of the compilers.

ALTERATION IN THE ARRIVAL OF THE MAILs
AT EDINBURGH,

Which has taken place since our Post-Office account for that City went to press.

A Mail arrives now in Edinburgh by half-past nine in the morning, or fully three hours earlier than it has hitherto done, reducing the time from London to Edinburgh from forty-one hours to thirty-seven and a half. A second Mail also now arrives in Edinburgh at half-past one in the afternoon.

Light Mails now start from Edinburgh for the North—one through Fife, and one to Perth by Queensferry, at a quarter-past ten in the morning. The heavy mail leaves Edinburgh at half-past two, or two hours earlier than it previously did.

A CONCISE EPITOME

SCOTLAND, separated on the south by Solway Frith and the Cheviot Hills from England, is bounded on every other side by the sea. It is comprised (exclusive of the islands) between latitude  $54^{\circ} 35'$  and  $58^{\circ} 45'$  north, and between longitude  $1^{\circ} 48'$  and  $6^{\circ} 7'$  west of Greenwich. Its extent from north to south is 280 British miles, and its greatest breadth about 150. The superficial content is computed to be 29,600 square miles of land, 638 square miles of lakes, and 18,944,000 acres of land, of which 5,043,450 are cultivated, and 13,900,550 uncultivated. The islands and islets on the coast are, it is supposed, nearly 300 in number; the most remarkable are the Shetland, Orkney, and Western Islands.

The most early mention made of this portion of Britain by any historian, is by Tacitus, who flourished about 100 years after Christ. The original population seems to have consisted of Cimbrians, from the Cimbric Chersonese, the modern Jutland. About two centuries before the Christian era, the Cimbrians appear to have been driven to the south of Scotland by the Caledonians or Picts, a Gothic colony from Norway. Tacitus denominates the country Caledonia; the Venerable Bede, who wrote about the year 700, names the country the Province of the Picts; and Alfred the Great, who translated his history into the Anglo-Saxon tongue, about the year 882, called the people Pichts, and their country Pichtland. From the Picts, then, or Pichts, probably originates the population of the Lowlands, the Lowlanders having been, in all ages, a distinct people from those of the western Highlands. In the tenth and eleventh century, the name of Scotia, previously applied to Ireland, was given to modern Scotland, by which title it is designated by Adam of Bremen. About 258 years after Christ, the Dalriads of Bede, the Attacotti of the Roman writers, passed, or repassed from Ireland into Argyleshire, and became the progenitors of the Scottish Highlanders, who speak the Irish or Celtic language, while the Lowlanders have always used the Scandinavian or Gothic. Fergus I, who is supposed to have reigned about 330 years before Christ, is said to have been the founder of the Scottish monarchy. From him, till the year 1006, there are reckoned eighty-two kings; after which, till Britain became subject to one monarch, the succession was as follows: Malcolm II; Duncan I; Macbeath; Malcolm III; Donald VII; Duncan II; Edgar; Alexander I; David I; Malcolm IV; William; Alexander II; Alexander III; John Baliol; Robert Bruce; Edward Baliol; David II; Robert II; Robert III; James I; James II; James III; James IV; James V; Mary; James VI. In 1603, on the death of Queen Elizabeth, James VI of Scotland ascended the English throne, and constantly resided in England, he, and his successors, calling themselves kings of England and Scotland, and each country having a separate parliament, till, in the year 1707, during the reign of Queen Anne, both kingdoms were united under the general name of Great Britain.

SURFACE, CLIMATE, &c.—The surface of the country is singularly irregular, being, on the whole, hilly or mountainous, more especially the northern district, which comprehends nearly two-thirds of Scotland, and forms what is called the Highlands, extending from Dumbarton nearly to the extremity of the island, about 200 miles. Nothing can be more awful to a stranger, than the appearance of the Highlands, where dusky mountains rise above each other, and lose their heads in the clouds, while the tremendous rocks fill the mind with dismay, heightened in no small degree by the noise of numberless torrents, which pour down their steep sides. The gloomy vales and glens below, narrow, deep, and dark, add sublimity to the scene. What is generally termed the Low Country, lies between the Friths of Tay and Clyde, and extends southward to the English frontier. In this division the proportion of cultivated land is very considerable, exhibiting, in many parts, verdant plains, watered by copious streams, and covered with innumerable cattle; in others pleasing vicissitudes of gently rising hills and bending vales, fertile in corn, waving with wood, and interspersed with flowery meadows. Situated in the midst of the ocean, and in a high northern latitude, Scotland cannot boast of a regular CLIMATE. It is various, too, in different places; the cold, however, is not so intense, as it is in similar latitudes on the continent. The thermometer does not sink so low during the winter, as it does in the vicinity of London. Mountainous countries are always most subject to rain; and Great Britain, being a sort of inclined plane, gradually declining from west to east, it has been thought, that, on this account, the western coast is more wet. This excess of rain is, perhaps, rather owing to the prevalence of the west wind, which brings humidity with it in its course across the Atlantic; hence we find that more rain generally falls at Greenock than at Glasgow, and more at Glasgow than at Edinburgh. As a counterbalance to this, vegetation, on the eastern coast, is checked during the spring months by cold and piercing east winds. Notwithstanding all this the air is in general pure and healthy.

The wild animals are the fox, the badger, the otter, the red deer, the wild roe, the hare and the rabbit; besides the wild cat, the hedgehog, weasel, squirrel, mole, &c. There is also proof of others having existed in this country, which are now exterminated, viz. the buffalo, or wild ox, the wolf, and the beaver. Of the feathered tribe, pheasants are to be found in the woods, though scarce, also that rare and beautiful bird called capercaillie, or cock of the wood. The ptarmigan, black game, and grouse, inhabit the heathy mountains;

in the vallies are partridges; in the fens the snipe and the plover; and in the plains most of the English singing birds, except the nightingale.

MOUNTAINS, RIVERS, and LAKES.—The most remarkable, and perhaps the most distinctive feature of Scotland, is her mountains. The principal ones are the Grampian hills, which run from east to west, from near Aberdeen to Cowal in Argyshire, almost the whole breadth of the kingdom. Another chain of mountains, called the Pentland Hills, runs through Lothian, and joins those of Tweedale. A third, called Lammer Muir, rises near the eastern coast, and runs westward through the Merse. Besides the continued chains, among which may be reckoned the Cheviot, or Tiviot Hills, on the borders of England, Scotland contains many detached mountains, some of them of stupendous height. Ben Nevis, in Inverness, the highest mountain in Scotland, is 4370 feet above the level of the sea; Cairngorm, in Banff, Ben Lawers, in Perth, Braeriach, in Aberdeen, and some others, are not much inferior in altitude. The country abounds with rivers and lakes, which are in general very pure and transparent, and abound with fish. Most of the rivers have a short course from the mountains to the sea, and are consequently very rapid; the principal are the Tweed, Forth, Clyde, Tay and Spey, of which the Tay is the largest; they all abound with fine salmon and trout. The lakes of Scotland are grand and beautiful, and some of them of considerable extent; their banks are in general clothed with wood, and the scenery is highly picturesque and pleasing. Of these Loch Lomond is the chief, both in extent and beauty, diversified with a number of small romantic woody islands, and begirt with shores in some places decorated with wood, in others naked and majestic. Next to it may be ranked Loch Ness, whose waters never freeze; Loch Tay, Loch Awe, Loch Ketterin, Loch Erne, Loch Leven, and many others, are deserving of the traveller's attention. It is worthy of remark, that the name of loch or lake is given, on the western coast, to many inlets or arms of the sea. Throughout the whole extent of coast there are fine fisheries, which employ a vast number of hands, and furnish a hardy and skilful race of seamen for the British navy; while her bleak mountains are an excellent nursery for brave and hardy soldiers.

COMMERCE, MANUFACTURES, MINERALS, &c.—Scotland produces many valuable articles of commerce; besides the trade in corn, the rearing of black cattle and sheep for the English market is very considerable. Of late great attention has been paid to the breed of black cattle; and the horses and sheep, though originally small, now rival those of England. Its woods of oak and fir are now begun to be considered with proper attention, and to be made serviceable to the navy. The mines of coal, lead, and iron, have long been sources of wealth, as have free-stone, lime-stone, and slate, which are found in various places, and in great abundance. Some attention has also been lately paid to its marbles, which prove little, if at all, inferior in colour or polish to those of Italy. Scotland cannot, at present, exhibit many of the precious metals, though considerable quantities, both of gold and silver, have, at different periods, been obtained from her bowels; and it is extremely probable that the time is not far distant, when these treasures will again be laid open. Copper has been discovered in many places, though, at present, it is no where wrought to any considerable extent; but a very rich mine of antimony has been worked, richer, it is believed, than any at present known. Most of the gems and precious stones, with the exception of the diamond, have also been found in Scotland. Manufactures of all kinds are in the most thriving condition. The printed cottons, and figured goods, in shawls, &c. equal those of England, and the glass and stoneware are scarcely surpassed anywhere. The linens, particularly those for the table, have long been famous. Manufactures of broad cloth, silks, and gauzes, are also upon a respectable footing. The intercourse with England is growing daily more frequent, to the mutual advantage of both countries. This has the effect of rendering the manners, dress, and language of both alike; of course all national prejudice will soon be at an end. The dress of the Lowlanders resembles that of the English. The dress peculiar to the Highlanders, though not so common as formerly, is still worn by many; it is composed of woollen stuff, called tartan, of various colours, checkered. Many wear a sort of petticoat, reaching to the knees, and called a kelt. The stockings, made of similar checkered stuff, are short, and tied below the knee with tartan garters, formed into tassels.

The Scots are uniformly sober and frugal; instead of lavishing their gains, they are wisely laid by, or economically expended to enable them to live in comfort, and make a respectable appearance. Intelligence is more common than in most countries, owing to the number of excellent parochial schools, and the cheapness with which education is acquired; and there are few branches of literature in which the Scotch have failed in attaining a degree of excellence, although they cannot boast of many authors at an early period. Before the abolition of episcopacy, the ancient church establishment was composed of two archbishoprics and twelve bishoprics. The national religion is now the Presbyterian, founded on an equality among its pastors. The clergy of Scotland are well educated, and singularly exemplary in their morals. Roman Catholics, of whom the number is not very considerable, are tolerated, as well as Episcopalians, and Dissenters from the established church. There are four universities; that of St. Andrew, founded in 1412; that of Glasgow, founded in 1433; that of Aberdeen, founded in 1500, and that of Edinburgh, founded by James VI. in 1582. Since the union of the two kingdoms, which took place in 1706, the political government has been the same with that of England; the civil code, however, and the manner of administering justice are different. Of this, and of the principal events, which have occurred in Scotland more particular notice will be taken in the historical description of Edinburgh. Scotland, though neither so rich or populous as the southern division of the island, has long borne a name for martial exploits; and of late she has risen to as great eminence in literature and the arts.

DIVISIONS, &c.—The main land of North Britain is naturally divided into three portions. The extremity is parted from the centre by the Moray Frith, Loch Ness, Loch Lochy, and Loch Linnhe, connected with each other by the Caledonian canal. The midland portion is again parted from the southern by the Friths of Forth and Clyde, the river Forth, Ben Lomond, and its cognominal lake. These are again unequally subdivided into thirty-three counties, which, in the following table, comprising the sheriffdoms, stewardries and bailiwicks, and the chief towns, are arranged according to their situation.

NORTHERN DIVISION.

33. Dumfries	Nithsdale, Annandale	Dumfries

The following is the grand total POPULATION of the kingdom, as exhibited by the government returns, at four periods—in the year 1801, the number of inhabitants amounted to 1,599,068; in 1811, to 1,805,688; in 1821, to 2,093,456, and in 1831, to 2,365,807. The total population of the shires, and of the several parishes, cities, towns, &c. will be found detailed in the tables appended to the descriptive sketch of each county.

REPRESENTATION.—The Parliamentary Representation of Scotland, as decided by the Reform Bill, is as follows: each of the counties returns one member, except Clackmannan and Kinross, which jointly send one, the same with the shires of Cromarty and Ross, and these of Elgin and Nairn, so that the thirty-three counties send thirty members. The cities of Edinburgh and Glasgow return two members each; Aberdeen, Dundee, Greenock, Paisley, and Perth send one each, and the following combined or contributory burghs send one jointly; making the whole number of representatives fifty-three.

COMBINED BURGHS.
Ayr, Irvine, Campbeltown, Inverary, & Oban.	Leith, Portobello, and Musselburgh.
Cupar (Fife), St. Andrews, Anstruther, East and West, Crail, Kilrenny, and Pittenween.	Inverbervie, Montrose, Aberbrothock, Brechin, and Forfar.
Elgin, Cullen, Banff, Inverary, Kintore, and Peterhead.	Inverkeithing, Dunfermline, Queensferry, Culross, and Stirling.
Renfrew, Rutherglen, Dumbarton, Kilmarnock, and Port Glasgow.	Linlithgow, Lanark, Falkirk, Airdrie, and Hamilton.
Wigtown, New Galloway, Stranraer, and Whithorn.	Kirkwall, Wick, Dornoch, Dingwall, Tain, and Cromarty.
Dysart, Kirkcaldy, Kinghorn, & Burntisland.	Dumfries, Sanquharr, Annan, Lochmaben, and Kirkcudbright.
Haddington, Dunbar, North Berwick, Lauder, and Jedburgh.	Fortrose, Inverness, Nairn, and Forres.

EDINBURGHSHIRE.

THIS county, or MID-LOTHIAN, is situated in the southern division of Scotland; bounded on the north by the Frith of Forth, an arm of the German ocean; by Linlithgowshire, or West-Lothian, on the west; by the counties of Lanark, Peebles, and Selkirk on the south, and on the east by Haddingtonshire, or East-Lothian, with small portions of Berwickshire and Roxburghshire on the east. The length of the county, from east to west, is about thirty miles; and its breadth, from north to south (from the centre), sixteen; but from its extreme apex on the south, to near Musselburgh on the north, where the eastern extremity of the county abuts on Haddingtonshire, its breadth is about twenty-two miles. The figure of this county, which is very irregular, may be said to describe the segment of a circle, indented on its southern boundary by the counties of Berwick and Selkirk, and on its south-western verge by Lanarkshire. It contains about 358 square miles, or 229,120 English acres.

In the first century of the christian era, this district of Scotland, according to the best authorities (including the Messrs. Chambers, from whose valuable topography we have drawn largely), was inhabited by tribes of Ottadini and Gadeni, the British descendants of those enterprising foreign Celts, who had first landed in the island. The Roman legions entered Edinburghshire about the year 80, when Agricola formed a chain of forts across the isthmus of land, between the estuaries of Clyde and Forth. We must pass over the obscure history of the wars of the natives and their irresistible enemies, the Romans, who finally secured the space they had at first marked down as their own. The skilful general who restored the Roman power was Theodosius, under the emperor Valentinian I, who, in compliment to his imperial master, entitled the extensive district he had thus conquered, the province of Valentia, which this warlike people retained possession of three hundred and sixty years. During their residence they reared altars, baths, granaries, and other works of art, still occasionally seen, and left those coins and weapons which, from time to time, are exposed in turning up the surface of the soil. The exigencies of the state at length required their presence nearer the Capitol, but it was with extreme regret that they abandoned their settlement. The date of their abdication is 446, and the epoch of the re-subversion of the Romanized Ottadini, by Saxon invaders, is only three years later. After a century of hard fighting, the superior genius of the Saxon Ida fixed this new race in those districts now comprehended in the shires of Berwick, part of Roxburgh, Haddington, Linlithgow, and a portion of Stirling. In the course of time this province obtained the distinctive appellation of Loadonie, Lothene, and more recently LOTHIAN. The origin of this title has occasioned much controversy, without arriving at a satisfactory conclusion upon its derivation. In common speech the district is to this day called Loudon, thus the popular phrase is more correct, as regards etymology, than that which is in use among writers. Every foot of ground covered by the metropolis and its environs has been the scene of warlike strife, frequently involving the fate of the kingdom. In the struggle which Edward III maintained for the restoration of the Baliol dynasty, one of the most sanguinary battles was fought on the Borough-moor of the metropolis. In 1385 Mid-Lothian was subjected to the horrors of pillage and conflagration, in the expedition of Richard II; and a century and a half later, it suffered much from the invasion of the English on account of the treaty of marriage between the son of Henry VIII and the young Queen of Scots. The country was soon after the scene of many of the insurrectionary movements against the authority of Queen Mary, particularly that at Carberry Hill. This district became subject to the government of a sheriff, prior to the reign of David I. The office of sheriff of Edinburgh seems to have been, at all times, an appointment of great trust and dignity; and from the thirteenth to the eighteenth century, was filled by the heads of families of note in the shire and its vicinity. The county is now governed, and its affairs conducted by the usual number of functionaries, with about forty deputy-lieutenants, distributed over six districts, each composed of a certain number of parishes. Of the many interesting events connected with this county, the metropolis of it has been the nucleus—in our history of Edinburgh, therefore, in the succeeding pages, will be found many details, which, although applicable to the shire at large, are more appropriately given in that article.

SOIL, PRODUCE, MANUFACTURES, &c.—The greater proportion of the county is, if not mountainous, hilly, and many places wild and pastoral. The most prominent rising grounds are the Pentland Hills, and the Moorfoot or Muirfoot Hills, both proceeding out of Peebles-shire. Of the other principal eminences, a list, with their altitudes, will appear at the end of this article. It is ascertained that by the close of the eleventh century, agriculture had made some progress in the district of Mid-Lothian. During the last and present century much has been accomplished in this part, in rearing plantations; but it is to the society of Improvers, formed at Edinburgh, about the year 1723, that this county is mainly indebted to its advancement in agriculture. In 1744 potatoes were first raised in fields, and in about thirty years afterwards their cultivation was completely established in the county. The agriculture of Mid-Lothian, like that of East-Lothian, is now conducted in the best manner that science can suggest, or capital render efficient. In the neighbourhood of the metropolis, there is a great and increasing quantity of land laid out in nursery grounds, and vegetable gardens, the produce of which supply the city markets; grass parks for temporary grazing, and arable fields for hay. The number of market gardens in which fruits are produced is considerable, and employ a great body of men in spade husbandry. Upon the whole, it may be remarked with regard to the soil of this county, and its management, that a very active spirit of improvement everywhere prevails; cultivation is rapidly ascending the hills, while the boggy grounds are gradually undergoing a process of draining. The farmers form a most respectable and well educated body of men; they hold the rank of gentlemen, and are generally in affluent circumstances. The county abounds in several valuable minerals, especially coal, sandstone, limestone, and whinstone. In the western part is an extensive coal field, and the eastern contains inexhaustible and rich beds of this valuable mineral, extending from the shore at Musselburgh, on both sides of the North Esk, about fifteen miles inward, to the head of that stream at Carllops, on the confines of Tweedale. Mid-Lothian possesses sandstone of different kinds, and of an excellent quality. The quarries of Edinburghshire have long enjoyed a pre-eminence which cannot be so effectually indicated, by anything, as by the appearance of the New Town of Edinburgh. The works of Craighleith, and Hailes, near the city, may be justly considered objects of curiosity. Almost all the houses of the New Town, besides other buildings, have been reared from the former mine. There are several other quarries of inferior note throughout the county. Lead was, in former times, found at the head of the North Esk, on the south side of the Pentland Hills. A vein of copper is said to exist in the parish of Currie, but it has never been worked. The MANUFACTURES of Edinburghshire cannot be traced to a remote date, and have never been remarkable for their extent. It is but little more than a century since, that the fabrication of linen was known in the county. In Edinburgh, Leith, and Musselburgh, there are now numerous manufactories of goods of different kinds, which will be found under their appropriate heads in the directory of these places. The principal articles manufactured in the shire for exportation, either by outports or inland, besides Scotch linens, are glass, soap, salt, candles, refined sugar, beer, ale, whisky, leather, bricks, tiles, pottery, iron, chymical preparations, printing materials, paper, and books. The manufacture of paper became first known in Scotland in this county, and the district still possesses large establishments employed in the manufacture of this invaluable material. The maritime traffic of the county, which is very considerable, is concentrated at Leith, the only port suitable to the entrance of large vessels, and indeed the only one of any kind except those of Fisherrow, or Musselburgh, or Newhaven. The formation of a navigable canal, proceeding to the west of Scotland from Edinburgh, makes the capital of this county not less the entrepôt of import as of export goods. The CLIMATE, though in a high latitude (nearly 56°) is, upon the whole, salubrious, and not unfavourable to vegetation: its greatest drawback is variability. A single day frequently exhibits all the diversity of the four seasons; and the cold east winds, which generally prevail for more than two months in the spring, are a great hindrance to vegetation, injurious to the fruit, and detrimental to the health of those accustomed to a more genial atmosphere. In conclusion, to adopt the language of the authors of the Gazetteer of Scotland,—‘Whether we regard the agriculture or the manufactures, the trade in minerals or the maritime traffic, the commerce and the domestic retail business of this metropolitan county, it must be conceded that the district is in the enjoyment of prosperity, and has before it the prospect of arriving at a still greater degree of wealth and greatness.’

RIVERS.—This county does not possess any large rivers. This deficiency, however, is of little or no moment, in consequence of being placed on the margin of a broad navigable firth. Next the FORTH the Esk may be said to be the chief river; it is composed of two streams that unite their waters below Dalkeith, and glide into the Forth, at Musselburgh. The LEITH, a valuable little river, takes its rise on the north side of the Pentland Hills, and after receiving several rivulets, discharges its waters, after a course of nineteen miles, into the Forth. The ALMOND, the most westerly stream, rises in the high grounds, on the borders of Lanarkshire; it is joined by the Brieich Burn, in its way to the Forth, which it enters at Cramond.

Besides Edinburgh, the shire does not comprise any royal burghs, but possesses three of regality, viz. Musselburgh, Canongate, and Portsburgh, and the town of Leith. Its only burgh of barony is Dalkeith. One member is returned to parliament for the county, and two for the city of EDINBURGH: the contributory burghs (or those which, in conjunction with others, are represented in the senate) belonging to this county, are LEITH, MUSSELBURGH, and PORTOBELLO.

THE PRINCIPAL EMINENCES in Edinburghshire, with their altitude above the level of the sea, are, Moorfoot Hills, 1850 feet; Caerketton (Pentland range), 1555; Spittal Hill, 1360; Arthur's Seat (from its base, 700), 796; House of Whim, 884; Woodhouselee, 720; Dalmahoy Hill, 680; summit of Braid Hills, 630; Pennycuik, 585; Salisbury Crags, 550; Craig Lockhart Hill, 540; Battery of Edinburgh Castle, 510; Corstorphine Hill, 470; Calton Hill, 350; Dalkeith, 200.

Note.—(a) The Population of EDINBURGH City, in 1801, was 31,681, and in 1831, 49,467—increase, 17,786. The Population of the Suburbs of Edinburgh (not including Leith) amounted, in 1801, to 35,313, and in 1831 to 86,834—increase, 51,521. LEITH, North and South, contained, in 1801, 15,272 inhabitants, and in 1831, 25,855—increase 10,583. (b) St. Mary's was constituted a parish in 1824; St. Stephen's since 1821.

The Total annual value of Real Property in this County, as assessed in April, 1815, amounted to £770,875.

EDINBURGH.

THE superb metropolis of Scotland, occupies a site in the northern part of the county to which it gives name, remarkable for its romantic inequalities, and within two miles from the south shore of the Frith of Forth; in latitude 55° 57' 20" north, and longitude 3° 10' 30" west; and distant from London 392 miles, 91 from Carlisle, 55 from Berwick-upon-Tweed, 73 from Dumfries, nearly 44 from Glasgow, from Dundee, by mail route 66, direct about 44, 109 from Aberdeen, and 241 from Inverness, by Aberdeen.

A SUCCINCT HISTORY OF EVENTS, CONNECTED WITH THE CITY.

EDINBURGH most probably owes its origin to the lofty rock so peculiarly eligible for a fortress, and its name to Edwin, the Anglo-Saxon King of Northumbria, who fell a victim to intestine turbulence in the year 634; for, during the era of Anglo-Saxon domination in Lothian, the Northumbrian chiefs occasionally occupied the castle, and Edwin more frequently than the rest, from whom the place received the appellation of Edwin's Burgh, subsequently contracted to Edinburgh. Upon the cession of Lothian to the Scots, in 1020, the castle often became the residence of the Scottish monarchs, and David I distinguished it as his favourite habitation. Under his royal patronage dwellings multiplied around it, and the Abbey of Holyrood soon acknowledged him as its founder, whose canons he empowered to erect a suburb westward of their abbey, to unite itself with his own burgh, which had rapidly extended itself down from the declivity of the castle eastward. The monks gave the name of Canonsburgh, or Canongate, to their new town, which appellation it still bears. The long street thus formed between the abbey and the castle consisted, it is presumed, of very humble dwellings, as it appears that, long posterior to this period, they were thatched with straw. From William the Lion, about the close of the 12th century, it is supposed the town received the privileges of a royal burgh, and the honour of being a place of mintage; but soon after, this monarch, as the price of his liberty, surrendered it to Henry II, king of England, by whom it was retained until 1186. In the year 1214 the first parliament assembled here, in the reign of Alexander II, which first gave to Edinburgh the semblance of a capital. In 1239 a general council of the 'Scottican' church met here; and during the reign of Alexander III it became the royal residence, and the depository of the records and regalia of the kingdom. In 1291 the town and castle were surrendered to King Edward I, but were speedily regained by the Scots, who held them, until the fatal battle of Dunbar, in 1294, enabled Edward to re-capture them. The castle continued in possession of the English until 1312, when it once more reverted to Scotland. In 1326 the fourteenth parliament of Bruce met in Holyrood Abbey; and the next year was memorable for the admission of the borough representatives among those of the other estates, and for the confirmation of the treaty of Northampton, by which the independence of Scotland was acknowledged by Edward III. Shortly after, Robert I granted a charter to the inhabitants of Edinburgh, and placed under their dominion the town of Leith, 'with its harbour and mills.' During the reign of Edward III the possession of the castle twice changed hands, but it ultimately submitted to its natural masters, and the city continued rising in consequence until it became the residence of the chief functionaries of the government, subsequent to the murder of James I, in 1436-7, at which period it assumed the attitude of the metropolis of the kingdom. About the middle of the fifteenth century it was encircled by walls, at the instigation of James II, the marriage of which monarch with Mary of Gueldres, and her coronation also, were celebrated with great pomp in the Abbey of Holyrood, which abbey became the tomb of the king eleven years afterwards. The turbulent reign of James III succeeded, during which the sites of the markets were determined, the provost made hereditary sheriff within the town, and various municipal privileges granted to the inhabitants; in token of the bravery and loyalty of the Edinburghers a banner was also given to them, to be displayed 'on defence of their king, their country, and their own rights.' This flag, from its colour, received the name of the 'blue blanket,' and remains now in the custody of the convener of the trades, at whose appearance therewith, says tradition, not only the artificers of Edinburgh, but those of the whole kingdom, are to repair to it, and fight under the convener. On all great pageants this memorial of the loyalty of the Edinburghers to the house of Stuart is ostentatiously displayed. In 1508 the thickly covered lands of the 'Borough Moor' were cleared of their trees, in virtue of the powers granted by the king; and, in order to obtain purchasers for the timber, the magistrates enacted that whoever bought as much as would be sufficient to make a new front to his house might extend the same seven feet further into the street; by which impolitic permission the town was filled with wooden houses, and the main street contracted fourteen feet in width. The year 1513 was memorable for the double calamity of the plague and the disastrous defeat at Flodden. This latter misfortune filled Edinburgh with consternation: all capable of bearing arms were ordered to defend the walls, and 'the women were discharged from crying or clamouring in the streets;' the privy council, for safety, adjourned to Stirling, where James V was crowned. At this alarming crisis the fortifications were strengthened, and a new wall built, which encompassed the high grounds on the south, more than half of which still remains. The plague continuing its virulence, the young king was removed to Dalkeith and Craigmiller, during whose minority the Earl of Arran and Cardinal Beaton, jealous of the influence acquired by the Earl of Angus, through his marriage with the queen dowager, attacked him and his partisans in the streets near the Netherbow-port, in which conflict more than two hundred and fifty men were slain, and the residue of the Hamiltons, or Arran's party, were expelled by the Douglasses, or faction of Angus. This bloody affair was designated by the populace 'Cleanse the causeway.' Similar sanguinary occurrences were not unfrequent in these contentious times; and, during this whole minority, the capital was the theatre of tumult, chiefly through the turbulence of the house of Douglas: as a proof of the prevailing disquietude, the privy council and parliament frequently met in the Tolbooth or common gaol. In 1514 the small force was appointed, afterwards known by the name of the 'city guard,' which was dissolved so lately as 1817. The year 1532 is signalized by the establishment, in the capital, of the College of Justice, which important corporation, including the whole body of functionaries connected with the supreme courts, endowed Edinburgh still more with the attributes of a metropolis; and as it rose in dignity the parliament thought it their duty to interfere for the correction of its deformities. Rows of obstructing tenements were removed, and many salutary regulations enforced for the prevention of impurities; the High-street was paved, and lanterns were ordered to be hung out at night by the inhabitants. In 1543, the magistrates having thought proper to deprive the craftsmen of the privilege of voting at the election of the provost and bailies, the deacons drew their swords in the council chamber; but the strife was subdued, partly by compromise, and partly by the irresistible reasonings of an armed force. The next year was a disastrous one for the rising metropolis; Henry VIII, of England, in revenge for the opposition made by the catholic regency of Arran and Beaton to the intermarriage of his son Edward with the young Queen Mary, sent an army and fleet to ravage Scotland, under the command of the Earl of Hertford, who, landing at Leith, set fire to Edinburgh, and burnt the abbey and palace of Holyrood. The attempt to capture the castle was unsuccessful, but the departing foe destroyed the pier of Leith, seized the ships in the harbour, and 'neither pyle, village, town, nor house, in their way homewards, was left unburnt.' In consequence of this outrage a French garrison was introduced four years afterwards, under D'Essee, who fortified Leith, and took every precaution to prevent a repetition of the calamity.

About the year 1556 the intrepid reformer, John Knox, became a conspicuous personage in these days of agitation. Being a great favourite with the populace, he was courageously defended against the attacks of the ecclesiastical powers, and when the reformers and the queen regent came to open rupture, the demolition of the religious houses, and the destruction of all the symbols of the Romish faith, by the populace, exhibited their hostility to papacy and their zeal in its subversion. On the anniversary of St. Giles, the patron saint of the city, the priests and monks were furiously attacked and dispersed, and the effigy of the saint, which they were carrying in procession, was indignantly destroyed; and when the lords of the congregation arrived from Perth, Sterling, and Linlithgow, they found their purposed work of desecration had been anticipated by the people; but it is fortunate that the rage of the reformers was confined to the decorations and furniture of the churches, so that two of the chief ecclesiastical edifices still remain, while the convents and monasteries have been converted into dwelling-houses, some of which are now standing. The struggle between the two parties now became fierce, and but for the arrival of an English force to the assistance of the protestants, the issue of the contest would have been doubtful; but the reformers, with these auxiliaries, becoming ascendant, the triumph of the popular sentiment was complete. The first assembly of the reformed kirk met in Edinburgh on the 15th of January, 1560. On the 9th of August, 1561, Mary, Queen of Scots, landed at Leith, from France, to sway the sceptre of her ancestors, and she was well received; but her predilection for the Romish ritual soon abated her popularity, and subjected her to insult; even her private chapel was invaded, and her devotions interrupted. The drama became now fearfully interesting, the scenes were rapidly shifted, and tragical incidents were occurring in quick succession. Darnley was proclaimed king at the market cross on the 28th of July, 1565, and on the next morning, within the chapel of Holyrood, he became the husband of Queen Mary. On the 9th of the following March, David Rizzio, the Italian favourite of the queen, was murdered, in the palace, by Darnley and his confederates. On the 19th of June the queen gave birth to a son, afterwards James the Sixth of Scotland and the First of England. On the 10th of the ensuing February, 1567, Darnley, while sojourning in a secluded house, called the Kirk of Field, near the site of the present university, was blown up by gunpowder, and many circumstances coincided to involve Bothwell in suspicion of planning the murder, and the queen of a guilty privacy: be this as it may, Bothwell, having divorced himself from his wife, became the husband of the queen in three short months after its perpetration. This shameless marriage took place on the 15th of May, 1567, in the palace of Holyrood, and was the occasion of fresh disturbances in Edinburgh. So formidable was the insurrection that the queen and Bothwell, on the 6th of June, fled, from the popular odium, first to Borthwick Castle, and thence to Dunbar, which abandonment of the capital was followed by the entry of 3,000 insurgents, who took possession of the seat of government. Shortly afterwards the queen was brought back to Edinburgh, a spectacle for the insults of the populace, and next day was sent a prisoner to Lochleven Castle. A regency was then formed in the name of the infant son of Mary, James VI, and the Earl of Murray was proclaimed regent; but the assassination of this popular favourite, two years after, at Linlithgow, threw the capital into confusion. The struggle between the contending parties was renewed with alternate ascendancy: the Earl of Lennox became the new regent, and Kirkcaldy, of Grange, the provost of the town and governor of the castle, declared for the queen, whose party held a parliament in the Tolbooth, while that of the regent held theirs in the Canongate. Kirkcaldy seized all the arms he could find, and planted a battery on the steeple of St. Giles, and being supplied by France with money and ammunition, he, and his associates, became formidable antagonists to the regency. Morton and the regent, on the other side, having united, fortified Leith, and for two years the two parties waged a fluctuating warfare, until Queen Elizabeth, of England, at the entreaty of Morton, sent a small army from Berwick, which soon reduced the castle; and the captive Kirkcaldy, with his brother, were shortly after hanged at the cross, although they had surrendered under a promise of merciful treatment. But the time had now arrived for the young king to assume the government himself. He entered the city with great pomp, and immediately convened a parliament in the Tolbooth, and tranquillity was, in some degree, restored. The Earl of Morton, the late regent, was now accused of being an accessory to the murder of Darnley, was convicted and executed by a machine called the 'maiden,' alleged to have been an invention of his own: it was similar in its construction to the guillotine of France. The reformation being now firmly established, education became an object of solicitude. The university of Edinburgh arose, and around it many subordinate colleges and schools, by which the character of the city became morally elevated. The poor also were not forgotten; funds for their maintenance were granted from the revenues of the suppressed religious houses and their lands. King James, though he had assumed the throne, held the sceptre with a feeble hand. The chief nobility, clergy, and a considerable portion of the community, were jealous of monarchy, and the uncompromising character of the new religion, with the austere manners of its professors, were little in unison with the manners and practices of the court. One anecdote will exhibit the prevailing feeling.—The king, desirous of shewing civilities to two French ambassadors, requested the magistrates to entertain them with a banquet (and by the way the frugal James was much addicted to being hospitable by proxy); but the French not being in good odour with the ministers, and the propriety, moreover, of protestants dining with papists being questionable in their judgment, the ministers, in order to keep in check any tendency to excess, ordered a fast to be kept on the day of the feast, and the pulpit of St. Giles was occupied during the whole of the day by three of their preachers in succession, who inveighed vehemently against voluptuousness and popery, the nobles, and the magistrates, who were partaking of the banquet by the direction of the king. The marriage of the king with the Princess Anne of Denmark, involved the citizens in grievous expences. They preferred presenting James with 5,000 merks, to providing an entertainment, and shortly after they were required to send a beautiful ship to Denmark, at the cost of £500., to bring home the king and his bride: they also presented the bride with a valuable jewel, pledged to them by the king as security for a considerable sum advanced him. Still these munificent donations did not exempt the citizens from 'intolerable impositions and grievous exactions.' In 1591 the Earl of Bothwell made a daring attempt to seize the person of the king: having introduced himself at night into the court of the palace, he advanced to the royal apartment; but before he could force the doors the alarm was given,—the citizens flew to arms and frustrated the attempt. Bothwell escaped, but eight of his followers were executed. A fresh cause of tumult soon arose; the young Earl of Murray, the heir of the regent, was assassinated by the Earl of Huntley; and as the king was suspected of connivance, the citizens indignantly arose and openly insulted both the king and his ministers. James thought it prudent to retreat to Glasgow, where he remained till the hurricane had subsided; not long afterwards the monarch was presented by these same citizens with ten tuns of wine, and a hundred of their number were in attendance at the baptism of Prince Henry: a guard of fifty citizens was also appointed to protect his person from Bothwell. In 1598 a rebellion broke out among the boys in the High School, and one of the bailies was shot by a youth while attempting to subdue it. James, annoyed by the freedom of the language that was uttered from the pulpits, attempted to restrain it, which excited an insurrection, which not only occasioned his prerogative to be insulted, but his person to be endangered: he, in consequence, retired from the city, ordered all the public courts to be removed, and was only prevented from avenging himself on the city still farther, by the supplications and cash of the magistrates. In 1596 James was again in collision with his subjects, in consequence of some English players being introduced into the city, and Shakspeare is supposed to have been one of the number: the clergy fulminated their abhorrence, and the presbytery issued a decree against them, which the privy council annulled, and the continuance of the players was tolerated, which was followed up in June, 1598, by an ordinance that every Monday should be a play day. At this period an important alteration was made in the computation of time. The year had hitherto commenced on the 25th of March, but by a convention of estates, which met on the 10th of December, 1599, it was ordered that in future new year's day should be on the 1st of January. On the 24th March, 1603, Queen Elizabeth died, which event elevated James to the throne of England, to which country he immediately departed, after taking a formal farewell of the citizens of Edinburgh at the church of St. Giles, where he addressed them after the sermon, and both parties, it is said, evinced deep emotion. The superior splendour of the English throne caused James, perhaps, to think his Scottish one too plain and unostentatious, and to change its character a little, he sent down to the magistrates of Edinburgh patterns for their gowns, which they were directed to wear, and, moreover, to have a sword of state carried before them; but, instead of sending, with these patterns, 59,000 merks, which he owed, he obliged them to be content with 20,000 in full of all demands; notwithstanding which, when the king paid his long promised visit to his Scottish capital in 1617, he was received with pomp, and addressed with adulation; these placable functionaries, upon the 'verie knees of their hearts,' styling him the 'perfection of eloquence and the quintessence of rulers,' and entertained him with a banquet, and presented him with a silver basin with 10,000 merks of double gold angels in it. A parliament was immediately convened, and among other acts which it passed was one for the restitution of archbishops, bishops, and chapters. In 1621 an act passed for the coping of houses with lead, slate, or tiles, instead of thatch, and water was introduced the same year by pipes; three new bells also were imported from Holland, two for St. Giles's Church and one for the New-berrow Port. March 27th, 1625, closed James's career; and on the 31st Charles the First was proclaimed king in his stead; and in June, 1633, he was crowned King of Scotland in the abbey of Holyrood.

The erection of Edinburgh into a bishopric, and an order for the introduction of a liturgy into the churches, caused great tumults in the city, resulting in a general assembly at Glasgow in 1638, by which presbyterianism was immediately restored. The treaties of Berwick and Ripon exhibit both the hatred of the Scotch to prelacy and the folly of the monarch in endeavouring to enforce it. Soon after the treaty of Ripon Charles visited Edinburgh, but though he was ostentatiously received, his conduct during his residence was neither discreet nor grateful. The 'great rebellion,' as it is termed, broke out shortly after, during which the 'solemn league and covenant' between the two nations, for the extirpation of prelacy, was signed in the High Church, Edinburgh, in July, 1643, and twelve hundred men were sent, in consequence, to assist the English parliamentary forces against Charles; but in 1645, the covenanters being routed by Montrose at Kilsyth, Edinburgh was threatened with destruction by the marquis, unless the prisoners of the king's party were instantly released; and the city at this moment being desolated by the plague, his demands were complied with. On the 18th of May, 1650, the same Marquis of Montrose was brought a prisoner into Edinburgh, and three days after was suspended on a gallows at the Cross. Averse to republicanism, the Scots proclaimed the exiled Charles II as their king, which brought upon them the avenging sword of Cromwell; and in December, 1650, this renowned general was in possession of Edinburgh and its castle, but the magistrates had fled to Stirling, the head quarters of Charles, leaving the city to be governed by thirty chosen citizens. The battle of Worcester having placed the whole of Scotland in the power of Cromwell, commissioners were sent by him from England to rule the kingdom, who arrived at Dalkeith in January, 1652; and from these the humbled citizens were obliged to obtain consent ere they could elect new magistrates. Under the sway of Cromwell Edinburgh and Leith enjoyed repose, but so greatly were they impoverished by so many years of strife, that very few of the inhabitants were in a condition to pay their debts, and the magistrates were seized with a charge of horning for £550,000 Scots, which, with difficulty, they obtained time to pay. During the period of the commonwealth there was a virtual union between the two countries, and much salutary reform was introduced in the municipal regulations. The restoration of Charles in 1660 was hailed by the town council, who, in return for a donation of £1,000 made to his majesty, received permission to levy a tax upon the citizens of one-third of a penny on each pint of ale, and twopence on each pint of wine consumed in the city; indeed, at this epoch, both loyalty and disaffection were made pretexts for americing the citizens, the first being called a tax, and the latter a fine. Adam Woodcock, at this period, was licensed by the town-council to run a coach between Edinburgh and Leith, the fare to be fourpence each person; and Baron Bailie, of Broughton, had a grant made to him of the goods and chattels of all women condemned for witchcraft. In August, 1660, the English tribunals gave place to the ancient forms of government, and the first parliament in 1661 rescinded all acts during the last twenty-three years, and restored episcopacy. Severities towards the presbyterians followed, and Scotland, in consequence, during the succeeding twenty-seven years, was in a state of insurrection and anarchy; the lawn of the prelate was stained with the blood of the presbyterian, and the slaughter-bodies of the covenanters were strewed thickly on the land, until at last the mantle of Knox proved more invincible than the mail of the cavalier. The magistracy about this time, by bribes and entertainments, entailed a debt upon the city which to this hour is a vexatious burden to its inhabitants. The Duke of Lauderdale appears to have been a prime recipient of the corporation money. Some curious specimens of the trifling of the municipal functionaries occur at this period. Women were forbidden to wear plaids on their heads on pain of seizure. The charges made at 'penny weddings' were solemnly moderated, and one James Michael Philo, physician, is authorised to erect a stage in Edinburgh on which to practice his profession, but is discharged from any performance of rope duncing, until his claim has been examined by the 'master of the revells.'

In the year 1679, James Duke of York took up his abode in Holyrood House, and won the affections of the citizens by the gaiety of his court, and by his conformity to their predilections: balls and masquerades were got up by the ladies in his suite, and the novel beverage tea was introduced to their parties; to the popularity acquired by James in this visit may be, in some degree, ascribed that zeal for the Stuart cause which was manifested in 1715 and 1745. In January, 1685, an equestrian statue of Charles II was ordered to be erected in Parliament-close; and on the 15th of February following the flagitious original was as cold and as lifeless as the statue. A few days afterwards a stage was erected at the Cross, from which the lion king at arms, attended by all the great functionaries, proclaimed King James, and swore unto him allegiance and fealty: the pulpits became rostrums for adulation; and Viscount Melior, one of the secretaries of state, was presented by the obsequious town council with a jewel, worth 500*l.* sterling, 'for the many services he had rendered the city,'—and, three days afterwards, with 300*l.* cash, for delivering the city address to the king. A few months after the accession of James, the citizens beheld the unfortunate Earl of Arayle led ignominiously to the same gallows on which Montrose had suffered, a melancholy victim to the failure of the Duke of Monmouth's disastrous insurrection. The fact, which afterwards transpired, of the earl being indebted to Heriot's hospital to the amount of 58,403*l.* 10*s.* Scots, threw one ray of light upon the previous darkness of his inexplicable conduct; the corporation of Edinburgh was compelled to pay the money. The suspension of the test soon disclosed the intentions of the king; and, early in 1686, every printer and bookseller in Edinburgh was forbidden by the privy council to print or sell any book animadverting on the Romish faith; but when the officer of the privy council waited upon James Glen with his prohibition, Glen said he had 'one book in his shop which was all against popery, but which he would sell in spite of the mandate.' 'What book is it?' inquired the officer. 'It is the BIBLE,' answered Glen—'the worst enemy the church of Rome ever fought against.'

Tumults now became rife. The chancellor's lady, and other persons of distinction, were insulted as they were returning from the celebration of mass; this led to an order from the privy council that one of the rioters, a journeyman baker, should be whipped through the Canongate: the populace rushed to the rescue of their martyr, beat the executioner, and continued tumultuous during the night; the king's foot-guards, and soldiers from the castle, fired upon them, and a woman and two men were killed; next day several of the captive rioters were ordered to be whipped—the council, however, took care to have musketeers and pikemen in attendance, to prevent the repetition of a rescue. A drummer was shot, for having said he could find in his heart to run his sword through some papists; and a fencing-master was hanged at the Cross, merely for having drank 'confusion to papists,' and having likewise expressed his good will towards the rioters. Such were the measures of the city magistracy, in defiance of the murmurs and disgust of the citizens; and shortly afterwards we find these servile minions assuring the king that they were 'ready with their lives and fortunes to stand by his sacred person upon all occasions, and praying the continuance of his princely goodness and care towards the city.' This fawning was rewarded by the surrender to them of the impost upon ale, of which the corporation had for some time been robbed by the treasury. So zealous, indeed, were the magistrates in the papal cause, that one Watson, a popish printer, having been distrained upon for rent, the articles seized were forcibly taken from the officer, and these, with their owner, conveyed to the sanctuary of Holyrood; Watson was afterwards made king's printer, which appointment was continued to his son in the reign of Queen Anne. From the records of Fountain Hall we find that, 'on the 23d of November, 1686, the king's yacht arrived at Leith, with the altar, vestments, images, priests and their appurtenances, for the popish chapel in the abbey of Holyrood. On St. Andrew's day the chapel was consecrated by holy water, and a sermon from Wederington. On the 8th of February, 1688, Ogston, the bookseller, was threatened for selling Archbishop Usher's sermons against the papists, and the history of the French persecutions; and all the copies were taken from him. On the 22d March, the rules of the popish college in the abbey of Holyrood were published, inviting children to be educated gratis. But the landing of the Prince of Orange in England changed the scenes of this pantomime. The presbyterians now poured into Edinburgh, and the papists rushed out—and all was uproar: the Earl of Perth, the chancellor, fled the city, and the government fell into the hands of the revolutionists. The populace assembled at beat of drum in multitudes; the abbey was attacked—the assailants were fired upon, and a dozen were killed and thrice as many wounded; this caused their retreat; but they quickly reappeared, headed by the magistrates, town-guard, train-band, and heralds: another skirmish ensued, in which Wallace and his men were defeated; the abbey church and chapel were ransacked, the college of jesuits destroyed, and the houses of the Roman catholics plundered; in short, every symbol of the scorned religion existing in the city was extirpated with a fierceness approaching to frenzy—even the wynds and closes were explored, and many religious houses therein were entered and sacked: the only class that remained true to the popish cause was the clergy, and they were the chief sufferers by the change. The privy council and magistrates veered with the shifting wind; these men, who so lately were ready with their lives and fortunes to stand by King James, with a baseness unmatched, were the first in 'offering their services to the Prince of Orange,' and the loudest in their complaints of the 'hellish attempts of Romish incendiaries!'

On March 14th, 1689, assembled the convention of estates—the most momentous meeting that Edinburgh ever witnessed. It resolved that, James having forfeited the crown, it should be offered to William and Mary; a second result of their deliberations was the memorable 'claim of rights,' a new election of municipal officers was advised, by poll of the burghesses paying watching and warding, and liable for other public claims; several ministers were deprived of their pulpits for refusing to pray for the new sovereigns; the convention became a parliament, and the established religion was declared presbyterian. The predicament of Edinburgh at this moment was singularly critical: on the one hand was the convention, surrounded by the masses of its supporters, armed and unarmed, including 6,000 Cameronians from the west; on the other was the castle, in the hands of the Duke of Gordon, the partisan of James, and who could, if he willed it, make the city a ruin; numerous violent royalists also paraded the streets, with Lord Balcarra and the reckless Dundee at their head—the latter, indeed, with a party of fifty horse waiting his signal for mischief. Yet no explosion took place: Dundee quitted the city for Perthshire, first clambering up the western side of the castle rock to commune with the governor. The death of this daring foe on the 17th of July, and the surrender of the castle on the 13th of June previous, secured the permanency of the salutary changes.

During the reign of King William, Edinburgh reposed in comparative peace; but the new civic government became jealous of the college of justice, whose members it disarmed: the gaol was filled with the disaffected,—among the number were the Lords Balcarra and Kilsyth, and the atrocious Earl of Perth, and many acts were perpetrated by the new authorities, which required more ingenuity than candour commonly possesses to defend. Towards the close of William's reign a trading speculation to the Isthmus of Darien caused six ships to sail out of the Frith of Forth, amid the acclamations of multitudes; and when its failure was communicated in March, 1699, the rage of the people was ungovernable, as the miscarriage of the enterprise was attributed to the influence of the king; the prisons were broken open, and many acts of violence perpetrated before the popular effervescence subsided.

The reign of Queen Anne was signalized by the event so momentous to Scotland, the 'act of union.' Alarming were the disturbances which manifested the unpopularity of the measure, and the period between January 11th, 1705, and January 16th, 1707, during which it was discussed, was one of clamour and outrage. The parliament and commissioners were compelled to seek the protection of the military during the ratification of the articles; many of the prognostications of the adversaries of the union were realized; the capital was soon deserted by the higher class of its residents, and their expenditure, in consequence, transferred to the rival metropolis; and among other causes of regret was the discontinuance of the popular city pageant called, the 'riding of parliament,' which was a grand and gorgeous procession. From the 1st of May, 1707, when the act of union came into operation, the aspect of the Scottish capital became strikingly changed, the city ceased to improve, and its inhabitants to be joyous; for nearly half a century, with only three interruptions, Edinburgh reposed listlessly and inanimate on its lofty site, as if exhausted by the violence of its former excitements. The first disturbance of this slumber occurred in 1715, when two attempts were made by the Jacobite party to get possession of the city, both of which failed. The remarkable tumult, known by the appellation of the Porteous mob, was the second, and happened in 1736: its particulars, including the attempted rescue of Wilson, the smuggler; the firing upon the mob by Porteous, the commander of the civic militia; his trial, conviction, reprieve, and subsequent execution by the hands of the rioters; the arrest of the lord provost for his want of precaution, and the fine of £2000. imposed upon the city as a compensation to the widow of Porteous, are all fully detailed in Sir Walter Scott's 'Heart of Mid Lothian;' and it is not the least extraordinary circumstance connected with this singular affair, that none of the actors in the tragedy have ever been discovered, although a large reward was offered.

The next agitating event was the memorable invasion of Prince Charles Edward in 1745, to whom the city of Edinburgh surrendered, which was followed by the proclamation, at the Cross, of James VIII. as king of Scotland. The battle of Preston Pans quickly succeeded, terminating in favour of the Pretender, after a conflict of ten minutes duration only. After an impolitic continuance in the city for six weeks, the chevalier departed with 6,000 troops, which, after marching and wandering during a period of six months, agitated alternately by hope and apprehension, met their final overthrow on the plains of Culloden, April 16th, 1746. Between this period and 1779 few events occurred important enough for our brief chronicle. In 1778 the mutiny of Lord Seaforth's Highland regiment, on account of their being ordered to India without payment of some arrears, and a stipulation as to the limits of their service, occasioned a considerable sensation. The mutineers ascended the lofty eminence of Arthur's Seat, where they remained encamped until an adjustment was effected by Lords Dunmore and Macdonald.

The eruption of that moral volcano, the French revolution, caused, in Scotland, as well as in the sister kingdom, a diversity of opinion. Those who hailed the emancipation of a great people from vassalage, formed associations for the nurture of the principles of freedom and the diffusion of political knowledge: these were watched with jealousy by the British government, and a system of espionage was established, the treacherous agents of which incited their victims to enthusiastic imprudence, and then betrayed them to their employers. Among the number so denounced were Messrs. Watt, Downie, Muir, Margarot, and Gerald; the first was convicted and hanged; the others were transported; Watt had been formerly a government-spy. The trials of these gentlemen, and the severity of their sentences, shed no lustre upon Scottish jurisprudence; but as such transactions, we trust, will never more occur, any stronger animadversion may be inexpedient. In the latter part of 1811, during the period of the 'volunteer' mania, the lower class of the population having become demoralized and profligate, recklessly concocted a plan for the indiscriminate plunder of the citizens, and on the last night of the year a numerous gang of juvenile desperadoes sallied forth with bludgeons, and knocked down every one whose appearance gave them the chance of a booty. Resistance was ineffectual, for the police were routed, and High-street and North Bridge-street were, for hours, in the possession of the plunderers. Many persons were dangerously wounded and several mortally. Three of the delinquents were executed in High-street, after conviction, for murder. The 15th August, 1822, will be memorable in the Scottish calendar, being the day on which George IV. disembarked at the landing-place of Leith. Our limits will not permit a detail of the movements of royalty, nor of the pompous preparations which were made for its reception: the accomplishment of so much in a period so short, was a matter of wonder. Well might the monarch exclaim 'how superb,' as he gazed upon the magnificence of the New Town on one side, the majestic grandeur of the Old on the other, and Calton Hill in front, with myriads of his Scottish subjects on its sides, and its monumental tower on its summit. Dalkeith House had the honour of his majesty's residence, and Old Holyrood that of a levee; the castle was also inspected, and on Sunday his majesty performed his devotions in the High Church. On the 26th, his royal presence graced the ball of the Caledonian Hunt, and the next day the sovereign witnessed Rob Roy at the theatre. Neither must we omit to notice the splendid banquet prepared for his majesty in the great hall of the Parliament-house, by the lord provost, magistrates, and town council: the former received the compliment of a baronetcy. On the 29th, after partaking of a repast at Hopetoun House, the king embarked on board the royal yacht at Port Edgar, near Queensferry, amid the cheering acclamations of the assembled thousands; and thus closed a spectacle which will long live in recollection.

We shall close this historical narrative by recording three calamitous fires in Edinburgh, both alarming and destructive. The first burst forth on the 24th June, 1824, in Royal Bank close, and progressed until it consumed a part of the eastern division of Parliament-square, destroying the houses popularly known by the name of the 'Pillars.' The second conflagration was far more serious: it commenced on the 15th November, at a house at the head of Old Assembly close, and burnt fiercely in the adjoining closes, until it reached the Tron church, the steeple of which it destroyed. In the evening of the same day, strange to say, a new fire was discovered to the westward of the first, by which those houses in the Parliament-square left untouched by the fire in June, were assailed and destroyed. The destruction of property unhappily was not the only result of the calamity: several lives became the victims, and many persons were wounded. Large contributions from the benevolent, which were offered with alacrity, alleviated much of the distress which the disaster had occasioned.

A BRIEF DESCRIPTION OF EDINBURGH, AND ITS INSTITUTIONS.

The city now consists of two parts, called the Old Town and the New, singularly contrasted in their aspects: the ancient portion, venerably majestic, covers an elevated ridge, gently sloping from the rocky eminence that sustains the castle, on the west, to the base of a group of hills, at the eastern extremity, named 'Arthur's Seat,' 'Salisbury Crags,' and 'the Calton Hill;' the modern division gracefully spreads itself over a plain, which declines gradually towards the north, till it joins the town and port of Leith, on the shore of the Frith of Forth. These two divisions are separated by deep hollows or ravines, and the main communication is by bridges or mounds thrown across them. To the spectator, viewing the city from either of the eminences named, the situation appears strikingly adapted to afford security in times of discord, and to give display to architectural beauty in the happier days of peace. For several centuries prior to the year 1763, Edinburgh had made little effort to enlarge its boundaries; but, since that epoch in its history, its extension has been marvellous; and Provost Drummond had the honour of giving the first impulse to this progression, when, on the 21st of October, in the year just mentioned, he laid the first stone of the 'North bridge,' the completion of which formed a ready connexion with the site which the New Town now occupies; the North Loch, which this bridge bestrides, had been previously drained. In 1767, an act was passed for extending the royalty over the fields to the north: the New Town was immediately commenced, and the buildings proceeded with so much rapidity, that, in 1778, St. Andrew's square, and the streets in direct junction with it, were nearly finished; since which, streets, squares, places, terraces, crescents, circuses, and public edifices, have arisen in rapid succession, wholly built of stone—an assemblage which, for regularity and beauty, will bear a comparison with the most magnificent cities of Europe. This northern district, usually denominated the New Town, now consists of three parts: the first, that which was commenced in 1763, and has been completed; the others, those additional buildings, erected or erecting, to the east, west, and north of the former. The first of these divisions, which stands upon the horizontal ridge on the north side of the Old Town, is laid out in the form of a parallelogram. The principal longitudinal streets are three—Princes-street, George-street, and Queen-street; and these are intersected by six others. George-street, which is 115 feet broad, has, perhaps, no rival in the grandeur of its appearance, the elegance of its architecture, or its exact uniformity: on the east it is terminated by a beautiful square, called St. Andrew's; on the west by another, of most superb buildings, named Charlotte-square; and it is ornamented by two statues, executed by Chantry, one of George IV., the other of Mr. Pitt. In the centre of

St. Andrew's-square stands the elegant column, erected by subscription, chiefly of naval officers, to the memory of the late Lord Melville: this noble pillar, the design of which was copied chiefly from Trajan's column at Rome, was begun in April, 1821, and completed in August, 1822; the entire height of the pedestal and pillar is 136 feet 4 inches, and the statue on the top 14 feet additional; the internal staircase consists of 192 steps. That part of the North Loch which lies to the west of the mound was inclosed in 1821; the ground was drained, planted with trees, shrubs and flowers, and walks formed. Queen-street gardens, comprising the space between Queen-street and Abercrombie-place, had, previously to this period, been laid out, by the proprietors of the houses, in a shrubbery with walks, though an act of parliament for this purpose was not procured till 1822. The central street of the second new town is called Great King-street, and is terminated, like George-street, by large open areas; one of these is named Drummond-place, the other the Royal circus. A third section of the New Town occupies the site formerly the park of the Earl of Moray, between Charlotte-square and the water of Leith, comprising Moray-place, Ainslie-place, Randolph crescent, and many superb streets. A noble bridge of four arches has lately been erected in this vicinity, across the water of Leith, called Dean-bridge, opening a communication from Queensferry-street to the parks on the other side, in which detached villas are rising, with pleasure grounds and shrubberies attached. The Eastern New Town comprehends the erections contiguous to the greatly improved Leith-walk, including the two magnificent terraces, and the crescent encircling Calton-hill, which towers above, bearing on its summit its observatory and a pompous group of monumental architecture. In a line with Princes-street is the grand approach to the city by the Regent's-bridge, which bestrides the unsightly district called the Low Calton. The act of parliament authorising the erection of this bridge, and the formation of the road, the most splendid of the recent improvements of Edinburgh, was passed in 1814; the bridge was finished in March, 1819. The arch over the Low Calton is 50 feet wide, 45 feet in height on the north side, and 54 feet on the south; the roadway is formed of reversed arches, which support the rocky materials of which it is composed; the bridge is ornamented at its centre by Corinthian pillars and open arches in the line of the adjoining buildings, called Waterloo-place; on the north side is the Waterloo Hotel, built, by subscription, at an expense of 30,000*l.*, and to the east is the post-office. The Southern District of the city occupies the rising ground on the opposite side of the central ridge. The buildings in this quarter contain a mixture of the ancient and modern styles of architecture: of the former description are the suburbs of Potter-row and Pleasance; of the latter are George's-square, Brown's-square, and Argyre-square. George's-square, by far the most extensive of any in this quarter, is 570 feet by 500; it is neatly decorated with shrubberies and flower borders. In the neighbourhood are elegant mansions, genteel streets, and pleasant walks.

The Old Town of Edinburgh has been so largely noticed in the preceding article, that it will not be necessary to say much about it here. The loftiness of its houses, built entirely of stone, the length and width of its main line of streets, and the elevation of its castle, give it an air of solemn grandeur; and those persons that have visited the towns on the continent will be struck with the similarity of its aspect to very many in France and the Netherlands. The Lawnmarket, High-street and Canongate form a continuous line between the castle to the palace of Holyrood, 5,570 feet in length, and varying from 90 to 50 in breadth. From this line descend, in parallel lines, countless numbers of alleys and lanes, called closes and wynds; the latter only will admit of the passage of a carriage; very many of each, especially of the former, are steep, narrow, dark and filthy. South Bridge-street and Nicholson-street is a second handsome line, running in a southern direction from High-street, ornamented by the university, the college of surgeons, and other respectable structures. The town declines gradually from the castle, so that the parts near Holyrood are comparatively low.

In every part of the city vestiges may be discovered of bygone days, and specimens of the architecture of different periods, a few of which will be noticed hereafter. The venerable and beautiful cross, once standing on the south side of High-street, near the High Church, has long since been removed; so also have the tollbow (or 'the Heart of Mid-Lothian'), the Netherbow port, the Old guard, the Luckenbooths, and the venerable edifices in Parliament-close; the five former were demolished by man, the latter by fire. The stranger, on entering the Old Town, by the earthen mound, cannot but be struck with the altitude of the houses towering before him to the height of nine stories. To the left is the noble building appropriated to the Bank of Scotland.

INTERESTING RELICS OF ANTIQUITY.

John Knox's House.—This venerable habitation, once occupied by the dauntless reformer, Knox, is a conspicuous object in passing from High-street towards the Canongate, as it projects at the terminating corner of the former, narrowing the street several feet at the point called the Netherbow. On its angle there is placed a small bust of this stern opposer of popery and prelacy, stretching forth his arms from a pulpit, and pointing to a stone above, on which is the name of the Deity in Greek, Latin, and English; and it is recorded that he often preached from one of the many windows which enlighten this ancient but not inelegant building.

Earl of Moray's House.—This handsome mansion stands not far from the above, on the south side of the Canongate, and is commonly called 'Regent Murray's House,' but the style of the edifice is in too good taste for that age: it was probably erected during the reign of James VI or Charles I, and occupied by the Earls of Moray, and subsequently by lord chancellor Seafield, which occasioned many meetings to be held here during the deliberations upon the great question of the Union, and many of the signatures to the ratification of the treaty were affixed in the summer-house of the garden, now a hot-house, a drawing of which is given in some editions of Sir Walter Scott's Tales of a Grandfather. In the garden, at the back of the house, grows a venerable thorn of uncommon size, which tradition affirms was planted by Queen Mary; but this, from the modern aspect of the mansion, is questionable. The house is now in the occupation of a paper manufacturer.

Palace of Mary of Guise.—The wreck of this structure, once tenanted by the queen of James V, regent of Scotland in 1550, now forms Blyth's-close, on the north side of the Castle-hill, consisting of a group of the most squalid and wretched tenements in the Old Town: the building on the right, at the bottom, was the oratory, and that on the left was the principal section of the palace: over the doorway a cypher, formed out of her initials, is still to be traced, and the inscription Laus et honor Deo. A house, surrounded by a grove, stands near the same spot, built by Allan Ramsay, the poet, and afterwards occupied by his son, portrait painter to George III. Within an obscure court, in the Westbow, still exists the former abode of Major Weir, the reputed wizard, who was burnt in 1678, a name still held in abomination by the Scottish peasantry; and on the opposite side of Westbow is a house, divided into many paltry tenements, but which, prior to this subdivision, contained rooms capacious enough for balls and entertainments during its occupation by the noble family of Somerville, whose arms and motto, In Domino confido, still appears above the doorway. In the centre of the wide street called the Grass-market, the paving stones are arranged in the form of a small St. Andrew's cross, to mark the spot on which stood the fatal 'gallows-tree' during the century previous to 1785; and also whence the spirit of many a martyr to the cause of presbytery has winged its way to glory, during that persecuting period when Charles II and James II attempted to force prelacy upon its scorers. To the west of Candlemaker-row is the cemetery of the Greyfriars Church, formerly the Scottish Westminster Abbey, and still the chief burial-place of Edinburgh: George Buchanan, Sir George Mackenzie, Colin MacLaurin, Allan Ramsay, Adam, the architect, Robertson, the historian, Blair, author of the popular sermons, and Alexander Henderson, chief delegate to the great Westminster assembly, and author of the 'Assembly's Catechism,' are a few of the eminent men whose bones lie mouldering here.

EDINBURGH CASTLE is situate on the western and rugged extremity of the central hill, on which the ancient part of the city is built. The area of the rock, on which the castle stands, measures about seven statute acres. It is elevated 383 feet above the level of the sea, and is accessible only on the eastern side, the others being nearly perpendicular. Within are several batteries, magazines, store rooms, arsenals for upwards of 30,000 stand of arms, barracks containing lodgings for 2,000 men with their officers, and every other requisite for the mustering and accommodation of a numerous garrison. In a small room on the ground floor, Mary, Queen of Scots, was delivered, on the 19th of June, 1566, of her only son James VI, afterwards James I of England, in whom were united the crowns of the two kingdoms. In an apartment, in this quarter, called the crown-room, are deposited the Scottish regalia, consisting of the crown, sceptre, and sword of state, which were placed here on the 26th of March, 1707. They are of elegant workmanship, and in perfect preservation. The crown is of pure gold, highly ornamented with precious stones. The sceptre is of silver double-gilt, with a stem two feet long, of an hexagonal form, divided by three buttons or knobs. It is surmounted with a crystal globe two inches and a quarter in diameter; its whole length is thirty-four inches. The sword of state is five feet long, and of exquisite workmanship. The pommel and hilt are silver gilt, and fifteen inches in length; the traverse is seventeen inches and a half. The scabbard is of crimson velvet, and richly ornamented. This sword was presented by Pope Julius II to James IV. The lord treasurer's rod of office is of silver gilt, and of beautiful execution. Edinburgh castle has a governor, generally a native nobleman, a deputy-governor, who resides within the walls, a fort-major, store-keeper, master-gunner, and two chaplains. Queen Margaret, the widow of Malcolm Canmore, died here in 1093, a few days after her husband was slain; and in the same year it was besieged by Donald Bane, brother to King Malcolm, assisted by the Norwegians. In 1174 it was delivered up to the English, together with many other strong holds, but shortly after restored. In 1239 the daughter of Henry III of England, marrying Alexander III, had this castle assigned for her residence. During the contest between Bruce and Baliol in 1296, the castle was besieged and taken by the English; but in 1313 it was re-taken by Sir Thomas Randolph, when King Robert Bruce caused it, with the other recovered fortresses, to be demolished. It remained in ruins, till King Edward III gave orders for its being rebuilt, and placed a strong garrison in it. In 1341 it was surprised by William Douglas. During the reign of Robert III, the burghesses of Edinburgh had the singular privilege conferred upon them of erecting dwellings within the castle, subject to no other limitation, than that they should be persons of good fame. The castle of Edinburgh has, at different times, served not only for the residence, but also for the prison of the Scottish monarchs. Thus James II, in the year 1438, was detained here by Sir William Crichton, the chancellor. Here, too, William, the sixth Earl of Douglas, was basely murdered by Crichton, who envied his riches and dreaded his power. James III was also confined in this castle by his subjects for nine months, till he was released, in the year 1482, by the Duke of Albany, who, assisted by the citizens of Edinburgh, surprised the castle. In 1573, this fortress was held for the unfortunate Queen Mary, at that time a prisoner in Fotheringay castle, by the faithful and heroic Kirkcaldy of Grange, who resolutely defended it, for thirty-three days, against the united efforts of the Scots and English. When the fortifications were battered down, the blockhouse on the east taken by assault, every supply of water exhausted, and the garrison in a mutiny, he made an honourable capitulation. In 1650 the castle sustained a siege of above two months against the parliamentary army, commanded by Cromwell, and, at last, yielded on honourable terms. After the resignation of James II, at the close of 1668, it was long held for him by the Duke of Gordon, with a weak and ill provided garrison. In 1715 an unsuccessful attempt was made by the rebels to surprise this fortress; and in 1745, although the Highlanders were masters of the town, they did not venture to attack this post. During the late war a number of French prisoners was confined in it; and his late majesty, while on his visit to Edinburgh, went in procession to the castle. In March, 1829, the ancient piece of ordnance called 'Mons Meg' was restored, having been removed from the fortress in 1754. This curious gun is supposed to have been fabricated at Mons in the fifteenth century. Although now useless, it is held in high estimation, and an elegant new carriage was lately sent from Woolwich on which it is now mounted.

The PALACE OF HOLYROOD HOUSE stands at the eastern extremity of the city, and at the bottom of that part of the High-street, called the Canon-gate. It is a beautiful building, of a quadrangular form, with an open court, which is ninety-four feet square in the centre. The more ancient parts of this magnificent edifice, consisting of the north-west towers, were built by James V, about the year 1528; though it seems to have been a royal residence for ages before. During the minority of Queen Mary, the Palace of Holyrood House was burnt, as well as the city, by the English forces under the Earl of Hertford. Soon after it was repaired, and enlarged beyond its present size. At that time it is said to have consisted of no fewer than five courts, the most westerly of which was the largest. Great part of the Palace of Holyrood House was burnt by the soldiers of Cromwell; but, at the Restoration, it was again repaired, and altered into its present form by King Charles II. The paintings of the Scottish monarchs were much defaced by the English soldiers in 1745. In the same year Prince Charles Stuart took up his residence for some time in this mansion of his forefathers; and hither the inhabitants of Edinburgh repaired to pay the contribution levied on the city. Of this palace the Duke of Hamilton is hereditary keeper. He has apartments within it, as have also several others of the Scottish nobility; notwithstanding which, a great part of the building remained uninhabited, till, in 1793, apartments were fitted up for the residence of the Comte D'Artois, the Duc D'Angouleme and Berri, and others of the French exiled nobility. And, in 1831, the Comte D'Artois returned to his old apartments, after an absence of thirty years, under the title of Charles X, King of France, with several of his family, but soon quitted them, and departed for Germany, where he died in 1836. Previously to the visit of George IV to Scotland, the apartments in the palace were fitted up for his use; and, though he resided at Dalkeith, a levee, drawing-room, and meetings of privy council, were held here. The apartments of the Queen of Scots and the chapel are shown to visitors; the former contain her bed, several articles of her furniture, pieces of needlework by her own fingers, &c. The armour also, and the boots and gloves which Darnley wore when he slew Rizzio, are placed in the small apartment in which the deed was done. Adjacent to the palace stand the ruins of the church, which belonged to the abbey of Holyrood House. In 1128 David I founded this abbey by a charter, the original of which is in the archives of the city; it was bestowed on the canons regular of St. Augustine, who had also granted to them the church of Edinburgh Castle, with those of St. Cuthbert, Corstorphine, and Libberton, in the county of Mid-Lothian, and of Airth, in Stirlingshire; the priories of St. Mary's Isle, in Galloway; of Blantyre, in Clydesdale; of Rowadill, in Ross; and three others in the Western Islands. They had also portions of land assigned them in different parts, with a most extensive jurisdiction; and so many other grants and privileges were bestowed on this abbey, that it was deemed the richest foundation in Scotland. In 1177 a national council was held in this abbey, on the arrival of a papal legate, to take cognizance of a dispute between the English and Scottish clergy, as to the submission of the latter to the ecclesiastical jurisdiction of the English prelates.

In 1332 the army of Edward plundered it; and it was burnt, in 1383, by the forces of Richard II. In 1544, during the irruption of the Earl of Hertford, the abbey was nearly reduced to ashes, and nothing was left but the nave, of which the ruins still remain. At the Reformation and Revolution it equally suffered, and in 1768 the roof fell in. The Royal Chapel is built of free-stone, and is of an oblong form, about 148 feet from east to west, and 66 from north to south. This was the nave of the original church, which, when entire, consisted of a centre and two aisles. In the south-east corner of the chapel is the royal vault, in which were deposited the remains of David II, James II, Prince Arthur, third son of James IV, James V and his consort, Magdalen, with their second son, Arthur, Duke of Albany, and Henry Lord Darnley. This repository of the royal dead did not escape the fury of the Revolution; part of the leaden coffins was then carried away, and the remainder at the clearing out of the rubbish, after the roof fell, in 1768. The area of the church is used as a cemetery. The precincts of the abbey of Holyrood House, including an extensive part enclosed by James V, are a sanctuary for insolvent debtors. In the lane called Gray's-close stands the little court of buildings formerly occupied by the Mint of Scotland. They were erected in 1574, but no money has been struck since the union of the two kingdoms; the officers are, however, still maintained. The first coins seem to have been struck in Scotland in the time of Alexander I, who commenced his reign in 1107. These coins were thin pieces of silver, called pennies; and this was the silver coin in use until the reign of Queen Mary, who introduced reals or royals, afterwards called crowns. The oldest gold coins bear the name of Robert, but whether of Robert I is not fully ascertained. James V, in his bonnet-pieces, contracted the surface and increased the thickness of the coinage. The general names for gold coin in Scotland was forins or nobles, and lions. When copper money was first coined in Scotland is uncertain; James III however, in 1466, procured an act from his first parliament for coining copper money, four to the penny. Pennies, worth one-twelfth of an English penny, were coined by James VI, and two-penny pieces, or baubees, after the Restoration. To the prince formerly belonged the exclusive right of coining money, and all mines of gold and silver; but the manufacture of currency was not confined to the capital, as many coins bear the name of Aberdeen, Perth, Stirling, Dundee, Linlithgow, and Dumbarton. The principal instruments used in coining, before the Restoration (when the mill and screw were introduced), were a hammer and steel dies. It is conjectured that the total sum of money in circulation, at the Union, amounted to upwards of £900,000. sterling.

THE PARLIAMENT HOUSE, where the ancient Scottish parliament sat, is a spacious hall, 122 feet long, and 49 broad: the ceiling is of massive carved oak, and the floor is also of oak, arranged in panels. The great southern window is of stained glass, in which is introduced a figure of Justice; and at the north end stands a colossal statue of Lord Melville, in white marble. Within this hall the grand banquet was given by the magistrates to the late George IV, in 1822: it is now called the 'outer house,' and is usually occupied by the Lords Ordinary, and those having business in court. In one of the adjoining courts is a statue, by Roubillac, of Lord President Forbes, erected in 1752; and in one adjacent is another of the late Lord President Blair. This noble hall, with the libraries of the advocates and the writers to the signet, the justiciary, exchequer, and jury courts, and the bank of Sir William Forbes, form a group called Parliament-square, in the centre of which is an equestrian statue of Charles II, erected in 1685.

The New County Hall stands at the western extremity of the new library rooms of the advocates and writers to the signet. The general plan is taken from one of the finest models of antiquity, the temple of Erechthus, in Athens, while the principal entrance is taken from the Choragic monument of Thrasylus. The length of the eastern front is nearly 103 feet, and of the northern front 57. The principal floor contains a large hall, 50 feet by 27; a court-room, 44 feet by 30, each 28 feet high; a committee-room, &c. Above are offices for the sheriff, sheriff's clerks, &c. The building was finished in 1819, at an expense of £15,000.

RELIGIOUS EDIFICES.

The established churches of Edinburgh are maintained and erected out of the funds of the burgh; from the same source, and from the port dues at Leith and Port Hopetoun, the stipends of the ministers are derived. These stipends, together with those of the preceptors, amount to nearly £11,000. per annum, to meet which a tax is levied by the town council of six per cent. on the house rents, besides the rent derived from the pews, and notwithstanding the surplus which these sources produce, the council have the power of imposing an additional cess for the erection of new churches.

St. Giles's Church.—This capacious and venerable metropolitan church stands on an elevated site in the High-street, forming one side of Parliament-square; and before the alterations and repairs, about six years since, its shape was cruciform, and dimensions as follows:—Length, from east to west, 206 feet; breadth, at the centre, 129 feet; at the west end, 110; and at the east 76 feet. A square turret rises from the centre, and from each corner of the tower springs the section of an arch, which, meeting together, present the appearance of a crown; these arches are ornamented with pinnacles, and from the apex rises a small spire, the summit of which is 161 feet in height, and may be seen from a great distance. The late renovation of the church has altered a little its original form as well as its dimensions. Of St. Giles, the patron saint, little more is known than that he was born in Greece, in the sixth century, and died in France, after living so saintly a life as to make it worth while to have one of his arm bones enshrined in silver and deposited in the church. This venerable fabric has witnessed many changes around and within. The liturgy displaced the mass, and the ritual of the presbytery has superseded both. The date of its foundation is uncertain: it is first noticed in 1359, when David II granted some lands to one of its officiating ministers. In 1466 it was created a collegiate church by James III. Soon after the restoration, St. Giles's was divided into four distinct places of worship, and it was despoiled of all its precious relics: it now consists of three separate churches, the chief of which is designated the High Church, wherein the civil, judicial, and ecclesiastical dignitaries are accustomed to worship. It is proper to mention that the government contributed £10,000. towards the recent alterations. The general assembly hold their annual meetings in this church in the month of May, to which they proceed daily in state during the twelve days of their assembling.

Trinity College Church, at the east end of the North Loch, was founded by Mary of Guelders, widow of James II. The fine Gothic style in which the choir, the central tower, and the cross of the church, were erected, causes regret that the whole was not finished. The church was once collegiate, and this elegant edifice, after undergoing a thorough repair, was opened for divine worship on the 13th June, 1815.

New and Old Greyfriars' Churches.—The Old Greyfriars' Church, which is situated in the Grass-market, was founded in the year 1612. The spire, which was used as a powder-magazine, was unfortunately destroyed by an explosion on the 7th of May, 1718. The magistrates finished a new church at the western end of the old one in 1721, at an expense of £3,045. Robertson, the celebrated historian of Charles V, once officiated as minister of this united church. The burial-ground has already been pointed out as an object of interest.

The Tron Church, so called from a tron or weighing-machine which formerly stood near it, is situated in the High-street, at the corner of South Bridge-street. An inscription over the door-way informs the reader that it was formerly called Christ Church, and consecrated in 1641. The front, towards High-street, is handsome, with a main and two side door-ways, with semi-Gothic windows, and the base of a turret in the centre, ornamented with pilasters. The original steeple was destroyed by fire in 1824, and the present very ornamental one was erected in 1828. The clock is illuminated after sun-set.

Lady Yester's Church, nearly opposite to the Royal Infirmary, was originally founded in 1647, principally by the munificence of Margaret Ker, Lady Yester. It was taken down in 1803, and the present elegant Gothic building was erected on its site.

Lady Glenorchy's Chapel is a plain structure, founded by that pious lady in the year 1772. It stands at the foot of Leith wynd, and is now in connexion with the presbytery, but within it the communion is celebrated six times a year.

Canongate Church, a Gothic building in the form of a cross, founded in 1688, was built at the expense of £2,400, from a legacy left by one Thomas Moodie, a pious citizen of Edinburgh. This church has two ministers, one nominated by the crown, the other by the town council and inhabitants of the Canongate. Many distinguished persons repose in the church-yard; Adam Smith, Dugald Stewart, and Ferguson, the poet, among the number. The gravestone of the latter was placed here by the poet Burns. The visitor will be struck by the rows of iron coffins which appear here on the surface of the ground.

St. Cuthbert's Church, or the West Kirk, situate near the foot of the rock on which the castle stands, has nothing particular to recommend it to notice, except that it is considered to be the largest place of worship in Edinburgh. It has two tiers of galleries. The burial ground is spacious, and many of the monuments are costly. There are three tasteful chapels of ease subordinate to this church: the first was erected in 1757, at the Cross causeway; a second stands on the west side of Clerk-street; and a third near Stockbridge, in the New Town.—Clerk-street Church, which is a chapel of ease to St. Cuthbert's, was erected in 1823: it has a handsome spire, one hundred and ten feet high, furnished with a clock and bells. The church will contain 1,800 auditors; the principal front is of Grecian architecture, and is a pleasing object to the stranger, as he enters the city by the Carlisle road.

St. Andrew's Church stands on the north side of George-street, in the New Town. It is surmounted with a fine tapering spire, 168 feet high, in which is a chime of eight bells. The whole is elegantly finished. The church is an oval.

St. George's Church, on the west side of Charlotte-square, forms the terminating object of George-street. The dome, which is seen to advantage in almost every direction, was intended as a miniature representation of that of St. Paul's. The building cost £33,000, and is calculated to contain 1,600 people.

St. Mary's Church is the central ornament of Bellevue crescent: it has a Corinthian portico, and an elegant spire, 186 feet high. The church will contain 1,800 people.

St. Stephen's Church stands in St. Vincent-street; its architecture is in the mixed Roman style; its shape octagonal, with a tower 162 feet high. It cost 21,000*l.* and will accommodate 1,500 auditors; it is of recent erection.

St. Paul's Chapel is an unpretending building in Nicolson-street, which was opened for divine worship on Sunday, the 4th of December, 1836.—Dean Church was opened May, 1836, and is a tasteful structure.—St. David's Church, Gardner's-crescent, is a handsome chapel of ease to St. Cuthbert's.—A new church is building in Young-street.—The Gaelic Chapel, the service of which is performed in the Gaelic tongue, is situated in North College-street, and is a chapel of ease under the direction of the presbytery.

SCOTTISH EPISCOPAL CHURCH.—This communion possesses six chapels in Edinburgh, several of which are very neatly ornamented, and within these the service is conducted after the ritual of the church of England. Scotland is divided by this body into six dioceses, over which preside the same number of titular bishops; that of Edinburgh includes Glasgow and Fife. The clergy are mainly supported from the produce of the pew rents.

St. Paul's Chapel, Carubber's-close.—This is the oldest episcopal chapel in Edinburgh; it certainly existed in 1734, and perhaps much earlier; it was long the chief place of worship for the Jacobites in the last century; it is very plain, and has an organ.—St. Peter's Chapel is in Roxburgh-place, and is a plain modern building, with an organ.—St. John's Chapel, at the west end of Princes-street, is in the florid Gothic style, with a tower 120 feet in height; it was finished in 1817, at a cost of 15,000*l.* The eastern window is of stained glass, as are also the windows above the pillars; and as this is the chapel in which ordinations take place, the interior is fitted up with appropriate conveniences and much elegance; the west end possesses a fine organ and a choir.—St. Paul's Chapel, York-place, is also Gothic, with four octagonal towers at its angles; it has buttresses surmounted with pinnacles. The conspicuous situation which it occupies, at the corner of York-place and Broughton-street, is felicitous for the display of its beauty. In one of its four turrets hangs a bell formerly used in the chapel-royal of Holyrood. The organ is considered the finest in Scotland; it was built in Germany. This chapel was erected in 1818, and cost 12,000*l.*—St. George's Chapel stands at the south side of York-place, and is singularly fashioned; it is nearly circular, and very low, and was erected in 1794. Grahame, the author of 'The Sabbath,' was a candidate for its ministerial duties.—St. James's Chapel is an ordinary structure, at the north-west corner of Broughton-place.

UNITED SECESSION CHURCH.—This respectable body of presbyterian dissenters has a presbytery and synod in Edinburgh, and numerous congregations; their most conspicuous chapels are the following:—Nicholson-street Chapel is on the west side of Nicholson-street, and its lofty Gothic front is very commanding; the fine Saxon arch of the doorway springs from two sculptured human heads. For many years, Dr. Jamieson, the compiler of the 'Scottish Dictionary,' was the minister of this numerous congregation.—Broughton-place Chapel is a modern Grecian-order edifice, with a portico and Doric columns; it will contain 1,600 worshippers.—Rose-street Chapel is a handsome building, in the eastern division of Rose-street, and is very capacious.—Cowgate Chapel was formerly episcopalian: since the change of its proprietary it has been considerably improved and altered; but the fine paintings in the recess at the eastern side, by Runciman, have been preserved. The other chapels are in Bristo-street, Potter-row, Portsburgh, Stockbridge, and Lothian-road.

THE ASSOCIATE SYNOD OF ORIGINAL SECEDERS has also a presbytery in Edinburgh, and two congregations; one in Infirmary-street, the other in Richmond-street. The congregation assembling in the latter were honoured by having for their pastor the late Dr. M'Crie, the admirable biographer of Knox and Melville. The Synod of Relief, and Original Burgher Associate Synod, have likewise congregations, which, with those belonging to other denominations of dissenters, will be mentioned hereafter, together with the names of their respective ministers. They include baptists, independents, Glassites, Brethrens, unitarians, friends, New Jerusalem church, and methodists; there is also a jews' synagogue.

The principal Roman Catholic chapel occupies a site near York-place, in Broughton-street, and is a handsome Gothic edifice. It was built by subscription, in 1813, and cost 8,000*l.* It has a very fine organ; and above the altar is an excellent painting, by Vandyke, representing a dead Saviour. There is also a second chapel, of smaller dimensions, near Lothian-street; and a third at Saint Margaret's convent.

NATIONAL INSTITUTIONS.

College of Justice.—This incorporated body, constituted in 1532, as has been stated in our historical narrative, comprehends all the functionaries connected with the supreme courts, including the judges (who are styled its senators), the faculty of advocates, writers to the signet, advocates' first clerks, clerks to the judges, extractors, and the keepers of the different departments. This important body, among other privileges, enjoys that of exemption from the assessments of the town-council, originally conferred to induce a permanent sitting of the court in Edinburgh.

The Court of Session.—This, the highest civil court in Scotland, is both a court of law and of equity, in which preside thirteen judges, separated into first and second divisions; in the former six lords, and in the latter seven. The presiding judge in the first division is the lord president, and, in the second division, the lord chief justice clerk. From the first division are detached two lords, with the title of 'lords ordinary,' from the second three. To one or other of these ordinaries all cases come in the first instance, but can be carried, by appeal, to the collective lords of the 'inner house,' as it is termed, but to that division only to which the ordinary was attached who first took cognizance of the case. The office of 'lord ordinary of the bills' is held, for a specified time, by one of the judges, or, during vacation, it is taken in rotation by all except the presidents. This high functionary sits permanently, either at his residence, or in the Bill-chamber, at the Register House, exercising the functions of supreme magistrate in all civil matters; and as all warrants require the sanction of the court of session before his majesty's signet is affixed, they are brought, in the shape of what is technically called 'bills,' to this lord ordinary, or his deputy, for assent, by which means he can suspend or affirm the judgment of inferior courts; he also grants deliverances or sequestrations, under the Bankrupt Act, during the recess of the court. By a recent Act the power of trial by jury is conferred on the court of session, to the extent of trying issues as to matters of fact. The presiding judges on jury trials are one or more of the judges of session, and a lord commissioner. The court of session has a winter term of four months, and a summer term of two, but there is a month's recess at Christmas. Appeals from the judgment of this court can be carried to the House of Lords. The Teind Court is held every alternate Wednesday during term, and has the power of regulating and enforcing the payment of tithes or teinds; for as the clergy cannot themselves exact their tithes, which are obtained from the landholders, and not the tenants, it is through the medium of this court only that they receive them. The judges of the court of session are also those of this court, nine being a quorum.

The HIGH COURT OF JUSTICIARY is the supreme criminal court, and sits every Monday during session, and also during holidays: it is presided over by a 'lord justice general;' but this office, being a sinecure, is to be abolished on the death of the present holder. The first efficient judge is styled the 'lord justice clerk,' subordinate to whom are five other judges, who are also lords of session. During the vacation in the court of session the commissioners of justiciary proceed on circuits. The causes which come before this court are tried by a jury of fifteen persons, a majority of whom decide the issue, from which there is no appeal.—The Commissary Court. Since the year 1830 the duties which this court formerly performed have been transferred to the court of session; still, however, a few commissioners take cognizance of testaments of persons dying abroad, having property in Scotland.—The Court of Exchequer. This court, which till recently was presided over by a lord chief baron and three ordinary barons, has lately undergone such a change as to be virtually abolished. There is no longer a lord chief baron, and when death or resignations shall have removed the subordinate barons, they will have no successors bearing that title, but their functions will be executed by one of the judges of the court of session.—The Lyon Court, which is now nearly obsolete, formerly regulated state pagants, executed the writs of the supreme courts, and decided upon armorial bearings. In the execution of the duties still remaining, the 'Lord Lyon' is assisted by a body of messengers-at-arms, heralds, and pursuivants.

The Faculty of Advocates hold a situation similar to that of barristers or counsellors in England. The affairs of the faculty are managed by a dean, or president, a treasurer, clerk, and council, selected from the members. Every advocate, after being found duly qualified by a committee appointed by the faculty, pays to the society an admission-sum of £200. one half of which goes to the support of the advocates' library, by far the most valuable in Scotland, which will be described hereafter. The Faculty of Advocates is subject to the authority of the court of session; and from their body the bench is supplied with judges. Hence, likewise, are nominated the sheriff-deputies of the different counties. This is not an incorporated body, and they cannot reject a candidate, if he pass an examination in the Roman and Scottish law, and have published and defended a Latin thesis, or a title of the pandects of Justinian. The number of advocates is at present upwards of 430, but nearly one half of the number, from various causes, do not practice. Society in Edinburgh is much indebted to the faculty of advocates, and the writers to the signet, for that taste in literature and science for which it is distinguished.

The Writers to the Signet are an important body, who have the sole right of passing warrants under the seal or signet of his majesty, in order to render them valid; in addition to which they act as conveyancers, and as attorneys in the supreme courts. This body, besides its other functionaries, has a professor of conveyancing in the university of Edinburgh. The qualifications for admission are an apprenticeship for five years, after two years previous study at the university, attendance on a course of lectures on conveyancing, and on the Roman and Scottish law. The members of this respectable body amount to more than 700; they have a valuable library, and an ample fund for widows.—Advocates' first clerks are also entitled to practice in the supreme courts.—The solicitors in the supreme courts have the privilege of practising in certain cases in the several courts of judicature; they are of long standing, and are incorporated.

Sheriff Court.—The officers of the Scottish militia receive their commissions from the lord lieutenant, or sheriff of the county. The sheriff-depute is wholly distinct from and independent of the high sheriff. A sheriff-depute, who must be an advocate of three years' standing, is appointed by the crown for every county of Scotland. He receives the royal revenues from the collectors within his district; he summons juries for the trials before the court of justiciary, and is the returning officer for county members of parliament. The decrees of sheriff courts are subject to be reviewed by the supreme courts of session and justiciary.

The Justice of Peace Court is of no earlier origin in Scotland than 1609. The justices are empowered to judge in cases of breaches of the peace; to regulate highways, bridges, and ferries; to see the laws executed against vagrants, beggars, transgressions of the game laws, and frauds against the revenue, besides many other branches of jurisdiction. But the principal business of the justices in Edinburgh comes before them, as a court for the speedy settlement of debts under £5., commonly called the Small Debt Court, which sits weekly in Edinburgh, and at intervals in the different villages of the county. This court, as well as that of the sheriff, is held in the new buildings for the county.

The Convention of Royal Burghs, instituted by James II, meets annually in Edinburgh, and consists of two deputies from each burgh. The lord provost of Edinburgh is perpetual president, and the city clerks of Edinburgh are clerks to the convention. The powers of this court chiefly respect the establishment of commercial regulations; and, as the royal burghs pay a sixth part of the sum, imposed as a land tax on the counties of Scotland, the convention is empowered to assess the proportion of each burgh. The place of meeting is an aisle of the church of St. Giles, in Edinburgh.

The Register House is the depository of state papers, public archives, title deeds of property, and of all legal contracts and mortgages; the records of all suits at law, and the various documents which have been produced in actions before the supreme courts, are also placed here. This establishment, important as it is, is almost peculiar to Scotland. The collection of documents deposited here is immense, and of course accumulating; but few are of ancient date—for the greater part of the papers relating to this kingdom, prior to the restoration, were carried away, at a very early period, by Edward I, and at a later era by Cromwell; and a considerable portion of those that were suffered to remain were unfortunately lost, or destroyed, in consequence of the fire in 1700. The most interesting and important document here is the copy of the articles of the union and of its ratification. The building is situate at the east end of Princes-street, fronting the North bridge, and is worthy of its precious deposit; it was planned by Robert Adam, and is a chaste specimen of Grecian elegance, combined with a happy adaptation to its purpose. The frontage is 200 feet wide, and its depth 120; the extended front is relieved by a pediment and Corinthian pilasters above the entrance. There are turrets at the corners, one exhibiting a clock, the other a wind dial. The structure is square, with a circular saloon in the centre, surmounted by a dome; the documents are neatly bound, and are arranged around this lofty receptacle. The Register House was finished in 1822, and the enormous cost was defrayed in part by a grant from George III. of 12,000*l.*, arising from the sale of forfeited estates, and the remainder by the government, who also provide for its maintenance. The supreme manager is termed the deputy-clerk register.

The General Post Office is an elegant building, in Waterloo-place, four stories high, with a spacious saloon on the ground floor; the secretary resides in the edifice. The regulations of this establishment are given in another part of the Directory. The Excise Office, in Drummond-place, was once the mansion of General Scott, and is a handsome structure of three stories. The Stamp Office occupies a spacious building in Waterloo-place, and, as well as the Post Office, is decorated with the royal arms. The Tax Office is in the same building with the Stamp Office; and is conducted by a comptroller and his assistant, five clerks and a solicitor, besides several surveyors. The Royal Exchange is in High-street; it is quadrangular, and surrounded with offices; among the number are the city chambers, charter house, chamberlain's and session clerk's.

MUNICIPAL ESTABLISHMENTS.

The chief magistrate of Edinburgh is the Lord Provost, whose office, both as it respects its dignity and its duties, resembles that of the lord mayor of London, while the functions of the four bailies are analogous to those of the aldermen. The town-council is composed of twenty-five members, elected by the several wards into which the city is divided, one-third part of whom go out annually in rotation. The treasurer, the dean of guild, and the convener of trades, are also office bearers of high consideration. There are fourteen incorporated trades, namely, 1. Surgeons, with whom the barbers were formerly conjoined. In March, 1778, the surgeons were incorporated by a royal charter, under the title of 'the royal college of surgeons.' The hall for the meetings of this society stands in Surgeons'-square; in it are a theatre for dissections, a small museum, &c.—2. Goldsmiths. This society, formerly attached to the hammermen, possesses a hall in South Bridge-street.—3. *Skinner*s, or Glovers. The hall of this incorporation is in the lane called Skinners'-close.—4. Furriers.—5. Hammermen. This society at first consisted of blacksmiths, goldsmiths, ironmers, saddlers, cutlers, and armourers. The goldsmiths were separated from them in 1581; but they have since received an addition to their number, which has increased the trades belonging to this corporation to seventeen. They meet in the chapel of St. Mary Magdalen, in the Cowgate.—6 and 7. Wrights and Masons. By a decree of the court of session, in 1703, the bow-makers, glaziers, plumbers, and upholsters, were added to the masons; and to the wrights were attached the painters, slaters, sieve-wrights, and coopers. This incorporation assembles in St. Mary's Chapel, Burnet's-close.—8. Tailors. To this incorporation anciently belonged the superiority and direction of all the tailors within the suburbs of Edinburgh and the town of Leith; and they still retain superiority over those in the more ancient suburbs.—9. Bakers. The members of this corporation have the sole privilege of baking bread within the city; but bread, baked elsewhere, may be sold within the city and liberties.—10. Fleshers or Butchers.—11. Cordiners, Cordwainers, or Shoemakers.—12. Websters or Weavers.—13. Hatters.—14. Bonnet-makers. To these the trade of a Lüster, or Dyer, was united in 1684, but the incorporation still goes under its former name.—The Burgh of Canongate, though an integral part of Edinburgh, is governed by its own local officers, and has its distinct incorporation of trades. The former are bailies, a treasurer, clerks, a procurator-fiscal, and an assessor; and the latter comprise the eight following trades—Skinners, Tailors, Wrights, Bakers, Shoemakers, Weavers, Fleshers and Barbers.—The Dean of Guild Court grants licenses for the erection of buildings, and condemns insecure houses, and also regulates weights and measures. The magistrates of Edinburgh hold criminal and civil courts; and there is a small debt court held in the council-chamber every Monday morning at ten o'clock.

The Police Establishment was re-modelled in 1822, and is now greatly improved in efficiency; it consists of thirty-two general delegates, elected by the inhabitants of thirty-two wards, into which the city and suburbs are divided. Each ward has also two resident commissioners, all householders or shopkeepers, paying £10. or upwards of rent annually, are entitled to vote. In nineteen of the wards a person paying £20. rent is eligible for a commissioner, in the other eleven £30. is the qualification; in addition to these commissioners there are magistrates and sheriffs. A criminal court is held daily, upon the plan of the London police offices, where a bailie presides, and the sheriff holds a similar court every other day, for offences out of the bounds of the royalty. The executive part of the establishment is performed by a superintendent, four lieutenants and other officers, such as inspectors of lighting, &c.; and their efficiency is exhibited in the improved illumination, cleanliness, and security of the city.

The National Jail is situated on the south side of the Calton Hill; it was completed in 1817, and is in the Saxon style of architecture, the length of it is 194 feet, and the depth 40; it has four stories, and in the centre is a chapel and a house for the governor, from which he can observe all that passes within, the system of classification being adopted; but it is to be regretted that debtors as well as criminals should be immured within the same walls. Separated from this prison, by a high wall, is the Bridewell, with the house of the governor in front; which efficient personage, from a dark apartment, can observe the movements of the inmates without being visible himself. Connected with the discipline of this prison is a treadmill. The Lockup House is at the back of the parliament house, and is for the reception of offenders under examination; for the refractory in the police court; for those unable to accomplish bail or fines; and for the unhappy convicts to pass the last mournful night in, prior to their execution. The Canongate Tolbooth is a gloomy antique looking building, not much unlike its defunct rival, 'the Heart of Mid-Lothian.' Debtors only are confined here, and though its aspect is miserable, and its apartments disgusting, the occupants prefer it to the airy prison on Calton Hill, wherein they would be compelled to mingle with the criminal. There is a Latin inscription on the front, bearing the date of 1591.

The city of Edinburgh returns two members to parliament; the present members are the Right Honourable J. Abercromby, speaker of the house of commons, and Sir James Campbell, his majesty's attorney-general.

INSTITUTIONS FOR EDUCATION, LITERATURE, SCIENCE, AND THE ARTS.

UNIVERSITY.—Edinburgh could not boast of a university at an early period. In the year 1579 a collection of books was bequeathed to the intended university by Mr. Clement Little, as a foundation for a library; the building was begun in 1580; a charter of erection was granted by James VI in 1582; and, in the year following, the college was opened for the reception of students. In 1617 James was so pleased with the progress which his favourite university had made, that he honoured the establishment by calling it 'The College of King James.' In 1619 Sir William Nisbet, provost of Edinburgh, gave £1,000. Scottish towards the maintenance of a professor of divinity. The protector, Cromwell, with a liberality worthy of a great mind, endowed the university with an annuity of £200. sterling. William III also bestowed on it £300. a year; but part of this grant was afterwards withdrawn by Queen Anne. The school of medicine, which has since risen to so much eminence, was first founded in 1721; and the Royal Infirmary was opened soon after. At present lectures are delivered by professors, who rank amongst the most eminent in Europe, in the various branches of literature and philosophy, theology, law, medicine, in natural history and in agriculture. The students are not obliged to adopt any particular mode of living, or of dress; in the arrangement of their academical studies they are also left at perfect freedom. The abilities of its professors, and their assiduity are such, that the University of Edinburgh has become a seat of education not only to youth in every part of the British dominions, but students have been attracted to it from almost every nation in Europe, and every state in America. Considerable sums having been obtained for the erection of a new structure, more consistent with the dignity of the establishment, a plan was prepared by Mr. Robert Adam, part of the old building taken down, and the foundation of the new college was laid on the 16th of November, 1789. But the sum collected, though large, being far from sufficient for the erection of a building of such elegance and magnitude, it was necessarily stopped. In 1815, however, parliament made a yearly grant of £10,000, to be expended in the completion of the building, under the superintendance of commissioners appointed by parliament. The commissioners met in December, 1816; and, according to Mr. Playfair's plan, which was adopted by them, the east front is adorned with a dome. A handsome portico, supported by stone columns of the Doric order, twenty-six feet high, forms the chief entrance. The east and west sides of the square are 255 feet in length, and the south and north 356. The interior court is surrounded by a continuous range of buildings in a corresponding style of architecture.—University Museum. Sir Andrew Balfour, to whom Edinburgh owes the institution of the botanic garden, was also the founder of this museum. His collections, which were very extensive, were placed, after his death, in 1694, in the hall of the college, lately the library; and, in 1697, Sir John Sibbald, presented the college with a great variety of curiosities, both native and exotic; but from neglect and a want of taste, it was almost completely demolished. This museum has been since enriched by various and extensive collections, particularly by the purchase of the magnificent one of M. Dufresne, of Paris; and the entire collection of birds alone contains upwards of 3,000 specimens, besides minerals, &c.; and the building, in which they are contained, is the most superb and elegant part of the college. The whole collection is exceeded by few in Europe.—The University Library is valuable and extensive, and contains many interesting historical documents. The college library of Edinburgh receives a copy of every book entered at Stationers' hall. The only other funds for its support are 10s. paid by each student for his matriculation ticket, and £5. paid by each professor on his admission. The volumes, which are under the care of a librarian and his deputy, amount to upwards of 50,000. The books are deposited in a hall 198 feet long, by 50 wide, one of the noblest rooms in Scotland.

The present grammar school, emphatically called the High School, was established in the year 1578. At first it contained only a master and an usher, but before the end of the century it was established nearly in its present form. The great increase of scholars having rendered the former building insufficient, the foundation of a new school was laid in 1777, by Sir William Forbes, Grand Master-Mason of Scotland; but this being afterwards found too narrow in its limits, the present elegant structure, which graces the south side of the Calton-hill, was commenced in 1825: it is in the Grecian style, 270 feet in length, with a centre and two side wings. The centre has a very tasteful portico, supported by Doric columns; and the building is finely displayed upon a rocky terrace, elevated ten feet above the level of the road. The play-ground is nearly two acres in extent. The cost of this edifice was £30,000. The teachers are a rector and seven masters; and the number of scholars may be computed at from seven to eight hundred.

The Edinburgh Academy is a handsome and capacious structure, in Henderson-row, erected in 1824: its object is the education of the youth of the higher classes, upon a system similar to that of the High School, for which purpose a fund was raised, by shares of £50. each, amounting to nearly £13,000: the appointments are filled by gentlemen of high attainments in their respective departments.—In Edinburgh, besides the above, there are many private academies and lecture-rooms, for classical and medical instruction, superintended by able teachers and professors.

The Royal College of Physicians was incorporated in 1681, by a charter, in which it is provided that they shall, at least twice in the year, visit all the apothecaries' shops within the city and liberties of Edinburgh, and destroy all damaged drugs. The hall, which is on the south side of George's-street, was founded in 1775, and is considered a chaste and elegant imitation of ancient Grecian architecture. The Royal College of Surgeons was incorporated in 1778, and is possessed of a most valuable museum; the bequest of Dr. Barclay's, and the purchase of Mr. Bell's in addition, have rendered their collection of anatomical preparations perhaps unequalled in Great Britain. The hall is in Nicholson street, and is a splendid edifice, in the Grecian style, with a portico in front, supported by fluted Ionic columns. The Royal Medical, the Royal Physical, and the Plinian Societies, have museums also connected with their institutions.

Royal Botanic Garden.—The first botanic garden in Scotland was formed by Sir Andrew Balfour, who was soon after assisted in his meritorious exertions by Mr. Patrick Murray, of Livingstone, and Sir Robert Sibbald. The Royal Botanic Garden, which was formed by Dr. John Hope, in 1767, was situated on the west side of the road to Leith; but has been removed to a commodious garden, of twelve acres in extent, on the lands of Inverleith, within a mile of the town, and is now in a thriving state.

The Advocates' Library, by far the most valuable in Scotland, besides a rare collection of manuscripts, prints, coins, and medals, ancient and modern, contains upwards of 120,000 volumes of printed books. A member of the faculty may borrow twenty-five books at one time, to be returned at the end of a year, with the power of obliging a friend with their perusal. The elegance and magnitude of the library itself nobly correspond with the books, &c. which it contains, and which are continually augmenting.

The Library of Writers to the Signet was formed about the middle of the last century, and has a large annual fund for its increase and support. It is very rich in the departments of British and Irish history; antiquities, topography, and biography. The signet library, advocates' library, exchequer chambers, and court-room, communicate with the large hall of the Parliament House. Besides these libraries Edinburgh possesses subscription ones, and also a Biblio-Critical Library, the object of which is to collect scarce and valuable books in sacred philology.

THE ROYAL INSTITUTION arose in 1819, and was incorporated by royal charter in 1827, being for the encouragement of the fine arts. There is an annual exhibition of pictures; and funds are accumulating to afford support to decayed artists. The apartments of the institution are within a magnificent structure, situate on the north end of the earthen mound: it is of the Doric order, with fluted columns ranging on each side, and in the front is a third range, supporting a pediment; the interior apartments are spacious and elegant. In 1826 a considerable body of artists seceded from this institution, and applied unsuccessfully for incorporation. This society is called the Academy of Painting and Sculpture.—The Society of Arts assemble in the Royal Institution, and are very efficient in the encouragement of useful inventions, models of which are exhibited annually; as also do the Royal Society, incorporated by charter in 1783, whose hall is very beautiful.—The Antiquarian Society exhibits a large collection of coins and antiquities, in a saloon of the Royal Institution.—The other societies in harmony with this article are too numerous in Edinburgh for our limited space, the names of a few being all that is practicable:—the School of Arts, the Wernerian, the Diagnostic, the Horticultural, the Hunterian, the Forensic, the Juridical, the Scots Law, the Speculative, and the Phrenological.

Though parish schools do not exist in Edinburgh in numbers proportioned to those of the rural districts, there is a Sessional school, patronized by the different kirk sessions of the established churches, which, in a great degree, remedies the defect: there is also a City's school in Niddry-street, an Infants' school, an Episcopal free school, a Catholic school, and schools of other denominations. Numerous Sunday evening schools have also been established; and, in Richmond-street, there is a very large seminary, under the direction of the Edinburgh Education Society. The Circus-place school, and the Scottish Institution for the Education of Young Ladies, are also distinguished seminaries. The Military and Naval Academy, for objects which its name imports, is situated in the New-buildings, in Lothian-road, and the Lancasterian school is in Davie-street.

Observatory and Astronomical Institution.—After several ineffectual attempts to erect an observatory, the foundation-stone of the present building, on the Calton-hill, was laid in 1776; but the money being spent before its completion, the magistrates finished it in 1792, but without fund or instruments. The Astronomical Institution was established in 1812, and the magistrates granted to the association the ground and building on the Calton-hill, formerly destined for the purposes of an observatory, on the condition of their not being applied to any other purposes. The property of this institution is held in transferable shares, of twenty-five guineas each, and the building is fitted up according to the intentions of the magistrates. The new observatory, a little to the east of the former, was founded in 1818: it is a cross of sixty-two feet, with four projecting pediments of twenty-eight feet each, supported by six columns of the Doric order, fronting the four cardinal points of the compass. In the centre is a dome, thirteen feet in diameter, under which is a pillar of solid masonry, of a conical form, six feet in diameter at the base, and nineteen feet high, intended for the astronomical circle.—Short's Popular Observatory is also on the Calton-hill, and contains telescopes of all kinds, an orrery, a camera obscura, solar microscope, phantomscope, and other optical instruments.

CHARITABLE INSTITUTIONS.

HERIOT'S HOSPITAL.—This magnificent endowment, one of the richest in Edinburgh, is indebted to the munificence of George Heriot, jeweller to King James VI, for its origin. The founder was born in the parish of Gladsmuir, and, in 1580, he wrought within a close, lately demolished, as a working goldsmith; and on pulling down his humble dwelling in 1809, the identical forge and bellows were found, with which he operated. When his patron, James, ascended the English throne, Heriot followed him to London, where he died in 1624, leaving £50,000., out of which he provided for two illegitimate daughters, and some other relations, and bequeathed the residue for the foundation of an hospital for the maintenance and education of the sons of poor burghesses of Edinburgh. His noble purpose was effected by the completion of this superb building in 1660, at an expense, it is said, of more than £27,000. It is a square, whose external sides measure 162 feet. Over the gateway is a spire, with a clock. The upper corners of the building are ornamented with turrets. The windows, of which there are upwards of 200, are all differently ornamented at the top. Boys are admitted between the ages of seven and ten, and are, in every way, most comfortably provided for till they are fourteen, and sometimes beyond that period. The number of boys maintained in the hospital in 1823 was 180; and the revenue, which principally consists of land of rapidly increasing value, is upwards of £5,000. This establishment is in the southern district of the city opposite to the Castle Hill, and is managed by a treasurer, who is appointed by the magistrates; under him are a house-governor, housekeeper, and the masters in the different branches of learning.

George Watson's Hospital, so called from its founder, George Watson, stands a little to the southward of the former. In 1723 Mr. Watson left £12,000 for the maintenance and education of the children and grandchildren of decayed members of the merchant company of Edinburgh. In 1738, when the sum had accumulated to £20,000., the present building was erected at the expense of £5,000. About eighty boys receive a classical and polite education in this hospital.

John Watson's Hospital is situated on the land of Dean, about one mile from the north-west part of the city. This structure is in the Grecian style, with a portico, and a range of columns: its object is 'the maintenance and education of destitute children, and bringing them to be useful members of society, and also for assistance in their outset in life.' Mr. Watson was a writer to the signet, and bequeathed the whole of his property, in 1759, for this benevolent purpose.

Gillespie's Hospital stands in a beautiful situation on the south-west border of the city. It owes its erection to the beneficence of the late Mr. James Gillespie, of Spylaw, who, in 1796, bequeathed considerable property for the purpose of founding and endowing an hospital for old men and women, and a free-school for the instruction of 100 poor boys in reading, writing, and arithmetic. The present building was begun in 1801, and contains about 50 inmates.

The Trinity Hospital owes its foundation to Mary of Gueldres (who also founded Trinity College Church) in the year 1461, for the reception of thirteen poor persons. The present building, situate in Leith wynd, provided, in 1823, for 9 men and 31 women, besides granting an allowance of £6. each to 100 out pensioners. None are received under 50 years of age. The clothing, diet, and lodging are most comfortable, and there is a resident chaplain.

The Orphan Hospital was planned by Andrew Gairdner, merchant, in Edinburgh, in the year 1732, and the present building was founded in 1734. Into this hospital orphan children, not under seven years of age, are received from any part of the kingdom. The revenues are chiefly derived from benefactions, and part of the sums collected at the church doors. It stands a little to the eastward of the north bridge, and contains about 150 orphans.

The Merchant Maiden Hospital was founded in 1695, by a voluntary contribution, for the education and maintenance of daughters of merchant burghesses of Edinburgh. Mrs. Mary Erskine gave £1,000., besides several other sums, for the purchase of a building. The foundation-stone of the present edifice, which is of Grecian architecture, was laid on the 2nd of August, 1816; it is 180 feet in length, and cost in the erection and fitting up £12,250. The girls, of whom there are generally about eighty in the house, are taken in from seven to eleven, and must go out at seventeen. On leaving the hospital each receives £9. 6s. 8d. The annual revenue is about £3,000.

The Trades' Maiden Hospital was founded in 1704, by the incorporations, for the maintenance and education of the daughters of decayed trade-men. To this hospital Mrs. Mary Erskine was a liberal contributor. About 50 girls are maintained and educated here. The building stands on the south side of Argyle-square.

Asylum for the Industrious Blind.—The idea of this institution was first communicated by the late Dr. Blacklock to Mr. Miller, both blind. After various meetings, subscriptions, and communications, a house was taken in 1793, and nine persons admitted. In 1806 they bought property in Nicholson-street for £1,575., and, in 1822, other property in the same street for £2,200. The lower part of these buildings is advantageously laid out in shops, while the upper part is retained for the accommodation of the objects of the institution. These two asylums contain about 100 persons of both sexes. The males are employed in making mattresses and cushions of hair, wool, and straw baskets, mats, hair gloves, nets, cord, and twine, and in weaving linen and cotton cloths; the females are engaged in needle-work, net-work, spinning, and knitting. Of all these various kinds of articles there is constantly an assortment for sale at the asylum.

The Deaf and Dumb Institution, established in 1810, occupies a large building near the Edinburgh academy, in Henderson's-row. The interesting objects of this charity are placed under the ingenious tuition of Mr. Kinniburgh and his assistants. His Majesty is the patron, and the Duke of Buccleugh the president.

The Magdalen Asylum was originally instituted in 1797. The object of the society is to reclaim those females who have deviated from the path of virtue. By the report of 1822, it appears that of 432 young women, who had been admitted since the commencement, 104 had been sent to service, 81 reconciled to their friends, 12 had been creditably married, 8 had died, and 38 remained in the house at the end of the year. This charity is supported by contributions, bequests, and the profits of the women's work. The new building, situate in Canongate, was opened in 1807, and is intended to accommodate from fifty to sixty penitents.

Ministers' Widows' Fund. This meritorious scheme originated in 1743, received the sanction of parliament in 1744, and was established on its present footing by an act passed in 1814, when it was recommended, that a voluntary subscription should be entered into among the contributors; that an addition of 20 per cent. on the former rates should be imposed; that every person in future admitted to a benefice for the first time, or to an office in the university, should pay a contribution of 10*l.*; a grant was made of the bishops' stipends in Scotland, and of the stipends of the vacant churches. The four annual rates, to one of which every minister and professor is subject, are 3*l.* 3*s.*, 4*l.* 14*s.* 6*d.*, 6*l.* 6*s.*, and 7*l.* 17*s.* 6*d.* The widow is entitled to an annuity, corresponding to the rate he has chosen; and his children, if he leaves no widow, for ten years to the annuity which would have been payable to the widow.—Similar schemes have been formed by the society of writers to the signet, the parochial schoolmasters of Scotland, and by the dissenting clergymen. The Scottish Widows' Fund and Life Assurance Company is open to the public; there is also a society for the sons of the clergy.

Horn's Charity distributes the interest of 3,500*l.* to day-labourers out of employment at Christmas, &c.—Dr. Robert Johnston's Bequest of 3,000*l.* is equally appropriated in finding employment for the poor, in clothing the boys of Heriot's hospital, and in support of poor exhibitors at the university.—The income of Mr. Strathan's Estate is bestowed in small annual sums on poor old people not under sixty-five years of age, and on orphans not above twelve.

The Charity Workhouse, which is situate in the southern district, was erected, by voluntary contributions, in 1743. The principal funds for the support of this institution are, a tax on the valued rents of the city, the collections at the church doors, charitable donations, and contributions. In the year ending on the 30th of June, 1822, 641 inmates were wholly or partially maintained and clothed in the house, out-door assistance to the amount of 1775*l.* 17*s.* 6*d.* was given to 924 families and individuals, besides 253*l.* 15*s.* 2*d.* as temporary supplies to others, and 442*l.* 1*s.* paid for 117 children at nurse.—There is also another workhouse in the parish of St. Cuthbert, which was opened in 1762, and is conducted nearly on the same plan with the former.—The House of Refuge, in Canongate, is for the reception of all persons in a state of destitution, into which the mendicity society has lately merged, and its conductors entreat of the benevolent to support this establishment, instead of yielding to the solicitations of mendicants, whether personally or by begging letters.

The Royal Infirmary.—This admirable house of mercy, in Infirmary-street, though founded in 1736, is indebted mainly to the exertions of the late Provost Drummond for its present efficiency, whose bust decorates the hall; the building is 350 feet by 210, the front is elegant, with a clock in the centre, and in a niche below is a statue of George the Second; at the top of the house is a theatre for surgical operations.

The Royal Public Dispensary, in Richmond-street, was founded in 1776, by the late Dr. Andrew Duncan, and is liberally conducted, but still too limited in its scale for a population so large as that of Edinburgh; consequently several others have arisen in different localities, including those exclusively for the eye and ear.—The New Town Dispensary, in East Thistle-street, should not be omitted. It was instituted in 1815, and supported by subscriptions; the expenditure for 1836, including interest upon money borrowed, was 352*l.* 9*s.* 1*d.*—There are besides, the Lying-in Hospital, in Park-street, several other charities of a similar character, and there is also a Lunatic Asylum. The Surgical Hospital, in Argyle-square, is designed solely for the treatment of surgical cases.

SOCIETIES FOR RELIGIOUS OBJECTS.—These Christian associations abound in Edinburgh; every denomination appears animated with a benign emulation for the diffusion of the scriptures by means of Bible societies, and the promulgation of their doctrines through the agency of missionaries. The designation of the various societies, with the situation of their offices, will be found in the miscellaneous list at the end of the Directory of Edinburgh.

PLACES OF AMUSEMENT, EXHIBITIONS, PUBLIC MONUMENTS & NEW BUILDINGS.

The Theatre-Royal is nearly opposite the Register House. Mr. Murray, the present proprietor, has done much to improve its external appearance; the inside is handsome, and will contain about 180*l.* The manager, in addition to the respectable company he usually retains, occasionally brings forward some of the leading performers from the English metropolis. The Caledonian Theatre stands at the head of Broughton-street and Leith-walk, and is a small edifice, handsomely fitted up for the performance of the lighter species of dramatical entertainment. The Assembly Rooms are in George-street, and were erected in 1787; these form part of a plain building, ornamented by a portico and pillars. The Hopetoun Rooms, in Queen-street, are also appropriated to balls and concerts. Exclusive of the balls here, many others, as well as concerts, take place during the season, under distinguished patronage. The national game of golf has several clubs to promote its practice. There are curling and skating clubs also, and a royal company of archers; the latter had the honour of being the king's body-guard during the visit of George IV.

Exhibition of Statuary, Calton-hill.—This collection of sculpture, from the chisel of Mr. Forrest, is much visited; and the admiration excited by the beauty of the figures is much increased by the reflection that the artist is a self-taught stone-mason. Short's Popular Observatory, on the same spot, is noticed elsewhere. The Caledonian Bazaar and Picture Gallery is in Wemyss-place. For other exhibitions, see Royal Institution.

MONUMENTS.—The Monument to Lord Nelson, on Calton-hill, is a circular tower, 100 feet high, its base being 356 above the level of the sea; visitors are permitted to ascend it. This is a conspicuous object from many parts of the city. The monumental tributes to Professor Playfair, and Dugald Stewart are contiguous. One to Burns, the Scottish poet, has been recently erected on the southern side of the hill, nearly opposite the High School; and on the east of the post-office is the Calton burying-ground, on which is a monument to Hume, the historian. The column and statue of Lord Melville have been noticed in our mention of St. Andrew's-square; in the same square, opposite the Royal Bank, is a fine equestrian statue of the Earl of Hopetoun. The National Monument, which was commenced in 1822, to commemorate our victories during the late war, was abandoned for want of funds; the 12 columns which decorate the summit of the Calton-hill, bearing the semblance of a ruin, are all there is to show for an expenditure of 13,000*l.*, more than 1,000*l.* a column! The original plan was to construct an edifice bearing some resemblance to the renowned Parthenon of Athens, by which the 'modern Athens' would be made to assume a still more prominent feature of the ancient city.

Club Houses.—The superb edifice erected in Princes-street, for the occupation of the New Club, is another graceful ornament to the 'modern Athens.' The United Service Club is situated in Queen-street.

FUEL, WATER, &c.—Edinburgh is now well supplied with coal; the Dalketh railway, the Union canal, and the neighbouring pits, constantly pouring in an ample quantity for the large consumption. The city receives a copious influx of water from Swanston, Crawley and Glenrorse, under the management of an incorporated company, whose pipes introduce 1,857 imperial gallons per minute into this metropolis; two reservoirs, one near Heriot's hospital, and the other on the Castle-hill, also contribute of their abundance. Families, by paying to the company a small rental, are provided with service pipes. Edinburgh is illuminated by coal gas, produced by a company incorporated in 1818, with a capital of 100,000*l.*, raised by 25*l.* shares. These gasworks are situate in the north back of Canongate.

Union Canal.—The basin of this valuable line of water conveyance between Edinburgh and Glasgow is situate about half a mile south-west of the castle, and is called Port Hopetoun; the completion of this basin, in 1822, caused a great metamorphosis in this quarter of the city, which, once so rural, is now environed by wharfs and warehouses. The Edinburgh and Dalkeith Railway.—The depot of this recently formed railroad is at the end of Rankellor-street, St. Leonard's; by this conveyance an abundance of coal is brought from the numerous pits in the neighbourhood, causing a considerable reduction in the price of this invaluable mineral.

The new silk mills, which Messrs. Casey and Co. are erecting at the west end of Fountain-street will probably be the largest silk-throwing mills in the kingdom; they will be called the Castle-hill Silk Mills.

MARKETS.—The wide street called the Grassmarket is appropriated every Wednesday as a market for cattle, sheep, and corn. The market-house is at the west end; and at the east end is held a market for shoes, which has been continued on this spot since the days of James III. Beneath and west of the North bridge are the chief markets for the town, which are plentifully supplied with flesh, fish, poultry, game, and vegetables: one, called the veal market, is for veal, poultry, and game; the next three, mostly covered, are for beef and mutton; the lowest, which is an extended area, surrounded by a piazza, is for fish and vegetables. Saturday is the chief market-day. There are also very commodious markets in West Nicholson-street, at Stockbridge, and in Broughton-street, for the convenience of those vicinities; and few towns in Britain are better supplied with the food of man than Edinburgh, whether it respects abundance, quality, or price.

POPULATION.—About a hundred years since, the population of Edinburgh, Leith, and their suburbs, did not exceed 50,000; in 1755, the number was 57,195; in 1775, it was computed at 70,430; and in 1791, it had risen to about 80,000. Our table in a preceding page, 13, exhibits the progressive increase,

LEITH.

The PORT OF LEITH is on the south shore of the Frith of Forth, and distant from the royal exchange of Edinburgh rather more than one mile and a half, the road between which is called Leith walk, and is a noble street, animated by the incessant traffic arising from the intercourse between the metropolis of Scotland and its port. The original name of this town was Inverleith, or the mouth of the Leith; and though it is indebted to its proximity to Edinburgh for its commercial prosperity, it has suffered greatly from being involved in the fate of that city, and also from the jealousy of its inhabitants. In 1485 the magistrates of Edinburgh ordained that no merchant of the city should take an inhabitant of Leith into partnership, and that none of the revenues of Edinburgh should be farmed by any inhabitant of Leith. Many of the misfortunes of this town, arising from its neighbourhood; will be seen by a reference to the history of Edinburgh, in the preceding pages. The first great disaster which befel this rising town, was its seizure and burning by the Earl of Hertford, in 1544. Three years afterwards Leith was again visited and injured by the same general, and after the year 1547 it became involved in almost every transaction of importance during the regency of Mary of Lorraine, in her efforts to oppose the reformation; and when Mary Queen of Scots mortgaged the superiority of Leith to Edinburgh, redeemable for 1000 merks, with the reversion in favour of Bothwell, the citizens of Edinburgh marched to Leith, and, by taking possession of it, destroyed its independence. In 1643 the solemn league and covenant was signed at Leith, and the inhabitants ever evinced the sincerity of their attachment to it. In 1650 Lambert, the parliamentary general, took possession of the town, and when Monk became commander in chief, he resided for some time in it, and by the orders of Cromwell, the citadel was greatly strengthened. During General Monk's from the census taken in the year 1801, to that of the last, in 1831; distinguishing the number of inhabitants in Edinburgh, in the suburbs, and in Leith.

ENVIRONS.

Bruntsfield Links are situate between Newington and Morningside, and are well adapted for the recreation of the citizens and for bleaching-grounds; here the national game of golf is often played. A Roman catholic nunnery is in progress on these links. Beyond this common are the Meadows, forming one of the most beautiful walks in the vicinity of the city.

St. Bernard's Well.—The waters of this spring, near Stockbridge, are sulphureous: the late Lord Gardenstone erected a temple over the stream, consisting of a circle of columns supporting a dome, having in the centre a figure of Hygieia. To this medicinal fountain numerous valetudinarians resort.

Restalrig is about a mile east of the Old Town, between the sea-shore and Holyrood House. It was formerly an independent parish, with a collegiate church, the fragments of which are still remaining; the burial-ground was a favourite depository of deceased episcopalians. Near Restalrig is St. Margaret's Well, covered by an arch, the only remains of a handsome structure. Restalrig is much resorted to in the season for strawberries, which are produced here in abundance.

Jock's Lodge, a straggling village, south of Restalrig, consists of numerous villas, and smaller houses which have arisen around the spacious cavalry barracks here.

Arthur's Seat is a lofty conical eminence, 796 feet above the level of the sea: from its summit may be discerned the outlines of twelve counties. To the west is the range of rocks called Salisbury Crags, which are more than 500 feet in height; to the north are the ruins of St. Anthony's Chapel and Hermitage, and near the foot is St. Anthony's Well; west of Salisbury Crags is the lower hill of St. Leonard's, where existed, in former days, a religious establishment, and a cemetery. The whole of this region is romantically grand, and derives additional interest from its being the locality of many interesting scenes in 'The Heart of Mid Lothian.'

residence he induced a number of English to reside here, who infused a spirit of mercantile adventure into the inhabitants. The subsequent history being involved with that of Edinburgh, our readers are referred to our history of that city for the details. This town and port still continue in a great degree under the domination of Edinburgh, modified a little by an act passed in the late reign. The town is now under the jurisdiction of a sheriff substitute, paid by the inhabitants, who holds a small debt court every Friday. The town council consists of a provost and admiral, bailies and admirals depute, four in number, and ten councillors. There are three resident magistrates or bailies, who are chosen by the town council, from a list presented by the retiring and prior bailies, and by the master of the four incorporations of mariners, maltmen, trades, and traffickers. The town council having the power of admiralty over Leith, and the sea to a certain extent, appoints an admiral for the execution of this duty, who performs it chiefly by the agency of the resident bailies, who are admirals depute, with a procurator fiscal and other officers. There are ten wards of police, each having two commissioners chosen by the inhabitants, and thirty ex-officio commissioners, partly chosen by the incorporations. The watching, lighting, and cleansing of the town is under the control of the commissioners of police. The town is divided by the river into two parts, called North and South Leith, the larger portion lying on the east or South Leith side.

PUBLIC BUILDINGS.

The Church of South Leith is an ancient Gothic building, on the east side of the Kirkgate; it was originally cruciform, and was ornamented by a turret and spire, but which, becoming dilapidated and insecure, were taken down in October, 1836. This church has two ministers. The cemetery around the church is prettily arranged.—North Leith Church stands to the westward of the town, and was erected in 1814; it has a lofty spire, the first compartment being in the Doric order, the second Ionic, and the third Corinthian; the height to the summit of the cross is 158 feet; the portico is a model of an Ionic temple on the Illysius, near Athens. It can accommodate 2000 persons. The inhabitants have the right of nominating the minister, whose stipend is one of the best in Scotland. The parish of South Leith has a chapel of ease in Constitution-street, which is spacious and handsome. There are also chapels for the united sects-ion, and the relief churches, an episcopalian, and several for other denominations, which appear in a subsequent list.

The Trinity-house, on the west side of Kirkgate, was built in 1817, in the Grecian style of architecture, at an expense of 2,500*l*. Nearly opposite stands King James's Hospital, founded by the Kirk-session of South Leith, in 1648, for the reception of aged women.—The Grammar School, erected by subscription, in 1805, stands on the south-west part of the links, or downs, of Leith. It is surmounted with a small spire and a clock, and the rooms for the different classes are elegant and commodious.—The Tolbooth, or Town-house of Leith, is situated at the lower end of Tolbooth-Wynd; and the Weigh-house is on the west side of Bernard-street. Neither of these buildings is remarkable for any thing except antiquity. Leith Bank is a handsome modern building, in Bernard-street; it was begun in 1805, and finished the year following. It consists of two floors, a handsome dome rises from the north front; and a projection, ornamented with four Ionic columns, and having three pilasters of the same on each side, decorates the building.—Besides this, a branch of the British Linen Company, and another of the Commercial Banking Company, are established in Leith.—At the east end of Bernard-street, in Constitution-street, stand the Exchange Buildings, the largest public buildings in Leith. They contain an assembly-room of large dimensions, a coffee-room, a sale-room, a subscription-library, and reading-room. The buildings are in the Grecian style of architecture, three stories in height, and ornamented in front with five Ionic columns. They cost £16,000.—The Custom House is in North Leith, at the end of the lower drawbridge, erected in 1812, and cost £12,617. It is in the Grecian style, with a pediment and columns. The business of the excise-office is likewise transacted within it.—The New Court House is a very handsome structure, situated at the corner of Charlotte-street. There are numerous charitable institutions and benefit associations together with bible and missionary societies, a mechanics' institution, a public library, dispensaries, &c. Among the public scholastic establishments are the Leith High school, a boys' charity school, and one of industry for girls. These, among other useful institutions, will be found under their appropriate heads of Public Buildings, or Schools, with their locality, and the persons officiating for each.

LEITH DOCKS, &c.

The tide harbour of Leith has been frequently improved; but the shallowness of the water prevents the admission of vessels of considerable burden. In 1799, the magistrates obtained an act authorizing them to borrow £160,000, to execute part of a range of docks, designed by John Rennie, Esq., civil engineer. The eastern wet-dock, next the tide harbour of Leith, was begun in 1800, and finished in 1806; the middle wet-dock was begun in 1810, and finished in 1817. Each of these docks is 250 yards long, and 100 yards wide, both amounting to more than 10½ English acres, and sufficient to contain 150 vessels of the ordinary classes, that frequent this port. On the north-side of these are three graving docks, each 136 feet long and 45 wide at the bottom; 150 feet long and 70 wide at the top; the width at the entrance is 36 feet. The cost of the whole was £285,108*l*, exclusive of £8,000, for building the bridge over the water of Leith. By an act of parliament, passed in 1826, the debt on the docks was reduced to £265,000*l*, which government lends to Edinburgh at the rate of 3 per cent. to be redeemed by a sinking fund formed by a deposit of 1 per cent. for twelve years, and 2 per cent. afterwards, till the debt is extinguished; after which the docks revert to the city of Edinburgh. Government also agreed to expend £19,000, for the extension of the western pier, and the city £2,800, on the eastern. A new harbour is now constructing at Wardie, two miles distant, and another is contemplated at Trinity, near the chain pier. It is anticipated that these new harbours will afford the requisite facilities for the entrance of vessels, at any period of the tide, as the deficiency of water in the present harbour has caused much shipping to prefer the ports of Aberdeen, Dundee, and others, by which the trade of Leith has suffered. There are three companies belonging to the town, engaged in the London and Leith trade, and others for the trade between Leith and Hull, Liverpool, Newcastle, Aberdeen, Dundee, Inverness, Stirling, Helmsdale, Hamburg, Rotterdam, &c. The greater part of the coasting vessels lie in the harbour, the others in the docks. The numerous steam vessels land and take aboard both at Leith and Newhaven. The east pier, by a recent addition, is now half a mile in length, constructed partly of wood, and partly of stone. A new and handsome pier has lately been completed, which has given additional convenience to the harbour.

Although Leith cannot be deemed a manufacturing town, the manufacture of glass is very considerable, chiefly of bottles, and sugar refining is carried on to some extent. Ship building is a prominent feature in the commerce of Leith; many remarkably fine vessels have lately been launched from the different yards. Saw mills also are in great activity here. Between Leith and Newhaven are the extensive barracks of the royal artillery. Seafield baths are situate at the eastern extremity of Leith Links; they were erected in 1813, at an expense of £8,000*l*, raised in £50, shares. These baths are both elegant and commodious, and contain hot, cold, tepid, and shower baths. The town and port of Leith became entitled by the reform bill, jointly with Musselburgh and Portobello, to send one member to parliament. The present member is J. A. Murray, Esq., the lord advocate.

The Markets of Leith, are situate a short way east from the Tolbooth, and were erected so late as the year, 1819. The areas of the different markets, are surrounded with neatly fitted-up stalls, and the whole has a commodious and creditable appearance. POPULATION of Leith, see table at page 13.

NEWHAVEN is a considerable village, in the parish of North Leith, from which it is distant one mile, and one mile and a half from Edinburgh: the road to the latter place is good, but that between Newhaven and Leith is circuitous, bad, and even dangerous. Formerly this village owed its consequence entirely to its fishery, which is still the main source of its support; but recently it has attracted many visitors for the purpose of sea-bathing, for whose accommodation many tasteful cottages have been erected; and steam navigation has also greatly enlivened this place, being more eligible for a landing-place than Leith. The chain-pier is a little to the west of the village, and was constructed by Captain Brown, R.N.; it is seventy-four feet long and four feet wide, over which 120,000 persons pass annually, the rental being £800, a year: but both this and the low water pier are frequently unapproachable by the steamers at particular periods of the tide. The fishwives of Newhaven and Fisherrow are a singular race, both as it respects their amazonian strength and their costume they carry, commonly in creels or willow baskets, on their backs, from one hundred and fifty to two hundred pounds weight of fish, supported by a bandage, which passes across their forehead: they wear a close fitting jacket, and the lower half of their person is enveloped in numerous petticoats, more remarkable for their variety and circumference than their length; by this sturdy race are the markets of Edinburgh and Leith most copiously supplied.

TRINITY, so named from the land being the property of the Trinity House, is a short distance to the westward of Newhaven, and contains commodious baths, which attract numerous visitors in the season, and many villas and dwellings have been built for their accommodation.

COLLINTON, SLATEFORD, CURRIE, & KIRKNEWTON.

COLLINTON, or Collington, is a village in the parish of its name, the latter lying at the base of the Pentland Hills, part of which it includes. The grounds rise beautifully from the vale of Corstorphine, and are finely cultivated, inclosed and planted; the water of Leith passes through them, and its banks are here romantic and wooded. The kirk and manse of Collinton, standing in the midst of lovely scenery, are four miles from Edinburgh. The manufacture of paper is carried on here, and that of snuff at SLATEFORD, a village in this parish; the district abounds with limestone and freestone. On the lands of Comiston, which lie to the east, are vestiges of a very extensive encampment, near which is a rude massive block of whinstone, called 'Camus-stone,' said to indicate the burial-place of some Danish commander. On these lands the fountain for the Edinburgh water cistern was first erected. Logan-house Hill, in this parish, is a considerable eminence, rising upwards of fifteen hundred feet above the level of the sea.

The parish of CURRIE is bounded by Corstorphine and Ratho on the north, Collinton on the west, and the Pentland Hills skirt it on the south. Through the low ground runs the water of Leith, and on its northern bank, six miles distant from Edinburgh, stands the village of Currie, through which the road to Lanark passes. The church is erected on a very commanding situation. The manufacture of paper and snuff prevails in this parish to some extent, the former particularly. On the estate of Maleny, beyond Currie, and

CORSTORPHINE.

THE parish of Corstorphine, which commences about two miles to the west of Edinburgh, possesses on the whole a remarkably level surface—the only eminences being its cognominal hills, not exceeding in altitude 470 feet above the level of the sea. The southern and western sides of these hills are beautifully decorated with villas, and well inclosed with plantations. The whole of the parish consists of rich arable land, producing crops of all kinds. The village of Corstorphine lies between three and four miles from the capital, on the high road to Glasgow, in a very pleasant situation; that of the church is particularly

DALKEITH

IS a populous and respectable market town, and burgh of barony, in the parish of its name, six miles south from the capital; occupying an exceedingly delightful and dry situation, in a fertile district, diversified with hill, dale, and wood—with the North and South Esk flowing round the place. The principal street, denominated the High-street, is handsome and spacious; and in it is held one of the greatest markets in Scotland—on Monday for meal, and on Thursday for grain; at the latter the average quantity sold, each market day, is nearly 3,000 bolls, which is all disposed of and paid for in the space of a quarter of an hour: on a signal given, by a bell, and not until then, the mouths of the sacks, which are regularly ranged in rows, are opened—all is speculating bustle and activity—the samples are examined, the bargains made, and the whole of the transactions completed in the short time we have mentioned. Dalkeith contains some thriving manufactures, particularly those of leather, candles, hats, and felts; the latter used in the making of paper, for which there is a new and superior establishment of the kind, belonging to a Mr. White. The town has been very much improved in appearance within the last forty years: the streets and principal shops are now lighted with gas, by a joint-stock company; and the inhabitants are well supplied with water, which is brought to the public wells in pipes. There are two good Inns, and four banking branches. The Duke of Buccleugh appoints a baillie to superintend the affairs of the burgh; and the peace of it is preserved by about fifty special constables, who are chosen from among the respectable inhabitants, sworn by the sheriff, and act gratuitously in suppressing disorders.

Besides the parish church, which is a plain antiquated building, there are two places of worship belonging to congregations of the united associate church, one for the relief body, and one for independ-

HERIOT, BORTHWICK, CARRINGTON, COCKPEN,

CRICHTON, AND TEMPLE.

HERIOT parish is ten miles in length, six in breadth, and situate sixteen from the capital. The surface is generally uneven, and on the banks of the Gala and Heriot waters the land is fertile: these two streams take their rise in the Muirfoot hills here, and afford fine sport to the angler. There are the remains of several ancient fortifications, most of them of a circular form, to be seen in this neighbourhood. The name of the parish imports the fine paid to the lord of the manor on the death of a tenant. A fair is held at the head of Gala water, for sheep and lambs, on the first Friday after Whit-Sunday.

BORTHWICK parish lies about twelve miles from Edinburgh, on the Carlisle road. Near the church, and beautifully situated on an eminence, are the ruins of Borthwick Castle, built in the year 1436, by Lord Borthwick: these interesting remains, which are only two miles west from Crichton, are eminently worthy of being visited by the intelligent tourist. This parish has been the birth-place of several highly distinguished men, among whom may be enumerated Principal Robertson, and Dundas of Arniston.

CARRINGTON, or PRIMROSE.—This small parish lies in the southern part of the county, on the descending braes which, at their summit, divide the district from the wilds of Peeblesshire. The village is pleasantly situated on elevated land, nine and a half miles south-east of Edinburgh, and consists of but a few houses and the kirk. Though not unfavourable to the growth of corn, the soil is more particularly adapted to that of the potato and green crops; coal is wrought in abundance, and there is also an indication of ironstone. Prior to the reformation, this parish had the valuable peculiarity of being a rectory independent of any monastery.

COCKPEN parish is about two miles long and one and a half broad, lying on the banks of the South Esk river. Dalhousie Castle, the seat of the noble family of Ramsay, is a building of great antiquity, and is pleasantly situated on the northern bank of that stream. The mansion of Cockpen, purchased by the Earl of Dalhousie, is deservedly admired for the beautiful position it holds, and the romantic scenery by which it is environed. At the village of STOBBS, situate partly in this parish and partly in that of Borthwick, and about ten miles from the capital, was erected the first gunpowder manufactory that ever was established in this part of Great Britain.

CRICHTON village is eleven miles south-east of the metropolis, situate near the road leading to Coldstream, by Soutra hill. The kirk stands apart from the village, on a brae overlooking the Tyne, which is here a mere rivulet. There is a good limestone quarry in this parish, from which are burned about 4,000 bolls annually; there are likewise veins of coal, but none are at present worked. The castle of Crichton is a very ancient and magnificent fabric; it was first erected by Chancellor Crichton, joint guardian, with the Earl of Callendar, to James II; during the life of its founder it was levelled with the ground, by William Earl of Douglas, but was afterwards rebuilt, and part of the latter work exhibits uncommon elegance.

TEMPLE parish, near the head of the South Esk, is bounded on the east by Borthwick, and on the south by Heriot. The village, which is about ten miles from the capital, occupies a secluded situation in a hollow, on the banks of the Gladhouse water, which falls into the South Esk a short way below; it has an old Gothic church, founded by King David I, for Templars.

KIRKLISTON,

A VILLAGE in the parish of its name, which is partly in Mid-Lothian and extends into Linlithgowshire, is eight miles from Edinburgh, situate on the left bank of the Almond, on the road to Falkirk. This place was anciently called Temple-Liston, from the circumstance of the Knights Templars having formerly had an establishment here. The village is well built, and possesses a neat church; the position of the latter is exceedingly pleasant. It is a place of but limited trade; distilling and grinding corn are the principal branches. The surface of the country is agreeably varied by rising grounds—is rich, well cultivated, and produces excellent crops; here Lord Stair first introduced the culture of cabbages in the open fields.

Within a field on the east side of the Almond stands a remarkable monument of antiquity, called 'the Cad-stane,' erected at a period too remote for conjecture: it stands four feet and a half above the ground, and is about eleven feet and a half in circumference; its surface bears a dilapidated inscription, which it has puzzled the skill of antiquarians to decipher. About a mile distant from Kirkliston is Newliston House, principally erected and finished by John Earl of Stair, and now the elegant seat of James Maitland Hogg, Esq. The house is handsome and modern; the plantations extensive, and tastefully disposed.

LASSWADE, LIBERTON, LOANHEAD, AND ROSLIN.

LASSWADE is a small and neat market village in the parish of its name, six miles south from Edinburgh and two from Dalkeith; delightfully situate on both sides the North Esk, which is here crossed by a good stone bridge. With its handsome modern whitewashed church, crowning the height on the north bank of the stream—and its modest rural cottages below, embosomed in luxuriant gardens and umbrageous trees—it may be esteemed one of the prettiest and most picturesque villages in Scotland. Within the lapse of a few years it has been greatly improved by the erection of many substantial freestone houses; and its growing prosperity is obvious from its possession of a paper mill, an iron and brass foundry, and a carpet manufactory.

The parish of LIBERTON includes three villages of this name—Upper (or Over) Liberton, Liberton Kirk, and Nether Liberton—all of great antiquity, but neither of them now of exclusive importance. The Kirk-town is about three miles from the capital, and the like distance from Dalkeith and Lasswade. The old church of Liberton, which was of Gothic architecture, survived till a recent date, when it was removed to make way for the present handsome semi-Gothic structure, whose square turret and pinnacles can be seen at a great distance; an excellent manse is adjacent, and the village is contiguous. The parish, which lies at the base of the Pentland Hills, is exceedingly populous; and its mines of coal, and its lime-works, are most extensive and valuable. Numbers of the inhabitants are employed in carting coals to Edinburgh, and many of the women in getting-up linen for the opulent families of that city. The celebrated cave, dug by George Paterson, a blacksmith, out of the solid rock, was finished in 1724, after five years' hard labour: in this cave are several apartments with beds, a table with a large punchbowl, all formed from the same unmaleable material; there are also a smith's forge, a well, and a washing-house. Here Paterson lived several years, and here he died about 1737. Craigmillar castle, sometime a favourite residence of Queen Mary, stands on a rising ground of moderate elevation, and commands a beautiful and extensive prospect of the surrounding country.

The North Esk runs through the whole length of the parish, and on its banks there is a continuous succession of beautiful seats, in the most inviting situations; such are Melville castle, Mavisbank, and Hawthornden—the latter remarkable for having belonged to Drummond, the poet and historian, and for the caves under it. These caves are three in number; the largest is twelve feet wide at the entrance, gradually tapering inwards; the height is six feet, and the length ninety: above there is a tunnel cut, for the admission of light and the circulation of air; in the recess there is a well, several fathoms deep. These caves are said to have afforded shelter to the Scots in turbulent times. At a little distance stand the venerable ruins of Roslin castle; and adjacent is Roslin chapel, one of the most entire and beautiful pieces of Gothic architecture now remaining in Scotland. In the burial ground of Lasswade church are interred the remains of Lord Melville, and Drummond the poet, before mentioned. The whole parish abounds in coal-mines, which have been wrought two centuries; upwards of 30 000 tons have been annually sent from hence to Edinburgh. The market is held on Thursday.

LOANHEAD is a neat and populous village in the parish of Lasswade, one mile from that town, rather more than two from Liberton, and five south-east of Edinburgh; it contains many respectable houses, and in the neighbourhood are the residences of several families of distinction. A considerable proportion of the population are employed in the collieries, and some in the neighbouring paper mills. This village possesses the advantage of being well supplied with water, conveyed in pipes.

ROSLIN is a small village and parish, the latter recently separated from Lasswade, and erected into a distinct parish of itself. The village is reached by a cross-road, leading southward from the line betwixt Peebles and Edinburgh; distant from the latter seven miles, from Lasswade two and a half, and from Loanhead two miles. It is much visited by tourists and parties from the metropolis, both on account of the beauties of the scenery, and of the ruins of Roslin castle and its chapel. These stand south from the village, the former on a much lower level, on the bank of the North Esk: the chapel is one of the most perfect specimens of Gothic architecture that time has permitted to remain in this part of the kingdom. These interesting relics, in connexion with the loveliness of the district by which they are surrounded, form an attraction that invariably delights the visitor of cultivated taste, and the admirer of the 'picturesque and beautiful.' The village is chiefly inhabited by families engaged in agriculture; the principal business establishment unconnected with those pursuits is that for the manufacture of gunpowder.

MID, EAST AND WEST CALDER.

MID-CALDER is a village in the parish of its name, 11½ miles w.s.w. of Edinburgh, and 8½ e. of Whitburn; pleasantly situate on the road from Glasgow to Edinburgh, on an eminence between the water of Limehouse and the Almond; and Calder wood, which is of considerable extent, overhangs it. The parish church is a fine specimen of Gothic architecture, but appears to have been left in an unfinished condition; a bughers' chapel is the only other place of worship. Two paper mills in the neighbourhood give employment to many of the working class. Coal abounds in the parish, and on the estate of the Earl of Morton is a lime-quarry, the stratum of which is sixty feet thick; there is likewise found a considerable quantity of excellent ironstone, which points out this place as a proper station for manufactures. To the west of the village is Calder House, the seat of Lord Torphichen, where the picture of John Knox is hung up in the hall, in which he first dispensed the sacrament of the Lord's supper after the reformation. The house of Greenbank, in the vicinity, is celebrated as the birth-place of John Spotteswood, Archbishop of St. Andrew's. Fairs are held on the second Tuesday in the months of March and October.

EAST-CALDER is a small village, lying one mile east from Mid-Calder, on the south road from Edinburgh to Glasgow.

The village of WEST-CALDER is very small, and destitute of any trading establishment; but the parish is rather extensive, being about ten miles in length by

MUSSELBURGH, FISHERROW AND INVERESK.

MUSSELBURGH, a town of considerable antiquity and a burgh of regality, in the parish of Inveresk, is six miles E. from Edinburgh, 49 E. from Glasgow, and three from Portobello; situate on the shore of the Frith of Forth, occupying a low site on a flat expanse of ground, betwixt the eminence on which the church of Inveresk is placed and the sea, on the right bank of the river Esk—the town of Fisherrow lying on the opposite side. It is said to have obtained its name from a muscle-bank near the mouth of the Esk. This town is noticed in history eight hundred years since, being the Eske-muthe of the Northumbrian Saxons, in whose time it was a seat of population. Before the reformation it belonged to the abbey of Dunfermline, from which it was wrested by James VI, who gave the superiority to the Lauderdale family, with whom it remained until the year 1709, when it was purchased by the Dutchess of Monmouth and Bucleugh. It is generally supposed that the first charter was granted by the Earl of Marr, in 1340, in gratitude for certain attentions paid by the inhabitants to the great Randolph, Earl of Murray, who died here in 1332, and who, it is said, bestowed upon the place the appellation which it still continues to bear—the 'honest town.' But the most ancient charter now extant is that bearing date 11th December, 1562; this was obtained from Robert, commendator of Dunfermline, and has been confirmed by subsequent charters and acts of parliament—more particularly by one from the Duke of Lauderdale, dated 1670, in which all the ancient rights and privileges are acknowledged; previous to which (in the year 1632) it was erected into a royal burgh, by a charter under the great seal. It is governed by a provost, three bailies, and a treasurer; and there are seven incorporated trades. The burgh unites with Leith and Portobello in returning one member to parliament; the present representative is the Lord Advocate, J. A. Murray. The magistrates are empowered to hold a court of record, and to grant enforceffments.

The town consists of one main street, in the direction of nearly east and west—extending from the Esk, on the west, to the beautiful inclosures of Loretto and Pinkie on the east; and through which the road proceeds from Edinburgh to Berwick and London. The central part of the High-street is spacious, with a good Inn on the north side (the 'Musselburgh Arms'), and the gaol, the latter partly renewed and ornamented in a handsome manner, on the west; it contains a considerable number of houses in the villa style, and is surrounded by rich and luxuriant gardens. The town is lighted with gas by a company, who have erected works for that purpose at the mouth of the Esk, from which Portobello is also supplied. The connexion with Fisherrow is maintained by two stone and two wooden bridges, all of considerable length; the uppermost bridge, which stands a little above the town, is of great antiquity, and was in former times a pass of some moment—and it is remarkable as being that by which the Scottish army crossed the Esk when marching to the battle of Pinkie, fought in 1547. This interesting old structure is now used only by foot passengers, the main road being by a more modern and handsome bridge, erected within the present century.

The trade of Musselburgh is considerable, and gives employment to numerous individuals: tan-works, haircloth and net manufactories, the making of hats, ropes and sailcloth, starch and earthenware, are carried on; there is a distillery doing good business, and the trade in corn and timber is of some importance. The most remarkable and peculiar in the class of manufactures are those of the haircloth and herring net: the hair is dyed various colours, and wrought up into fabrics for covering sofas, chairs, &c.; it is also employed in making hats, hunting-caps, shoes, vests, &c. In the manufacture of the 'patent herring net,' the article is produced from looms of an ingenious and novel construction, the invention of Mr. James Paterson, of Fisherrow; and as they can be rendered much cheaper than those constructed in the old way, they are gradually superseding that description. Inland, Musselburgh is surrounded by a rich agricultural country, and by a number of coal-pits in full operation, engaging the industry of a large population. Besides these sources of wealth, the town is benefited by the residence of a number of retired families in the upper class of society; and its trade and commerce facilitated by two branches of highly respectable banking-houses. The places of worship are the parish church of Inveresk, and episcopalian, relief, and Wesleyan chapels. The church, which is a conspicuous edifice, and its steeple a well-known object on approaching the coast here, is inconveniently situated for the majority of the population, and too small for its greatly augmented congregation: it is intended, therefore, to erect an additional church in Fisherrow, in furtherance of which subscriptions to a considerable amount have been raised. Musselburgh has long been distinguished for its seminaries, amongst which the burgh grammar-school takes a distinguished stand. The 'links' here have, from time immemorial, been in great repute for their excellence as a golfing-ground; a silver cup is played for annually by the club, which has been established since the year 1670. These downs have likewise long been the resort, for one day in the year, of the 'royal company of archers;' since 1817 the Edinburgh horse-races have been run here in the autumn, and the races of the Caledonian Hunt take place every third year.

FISHERROW is connected with Musselburgh by several bridges, the principal a handsome one of stone; indeed both places may be considered as forming but one, and our description of Musselburgh consequently involves, in most particulars, that of Fisherrow. The latter has a harbour, and a branch of the custom-house: a large sum has of late years been expended in improving the port, but from its situation it never can be made capable of admitting vessels of considerable size; Fisherrow is, however, connected with the capital by a railway. The greater portion of its population are engaged in the fishing business, and by this pursuit supply the Edinburgh markets. The occupation of the women of these towns and neighbourhood should not be left unnoticed: they are the carriers of greens, salt, and fish, to the metropolis; to that mart they trudge, loaded with very heavy burdens, early in the morning, and return by mid-day after disposing of their produce; in this way they gain from 8d. to 1s. 3d. a day.

They form a peculiar class, distinguished from the rest of the community by their dress, habits and manners, and partake but little in the general improvement; the husbands being fishermen, or of other occupations, they acquire a tolerable competence between them

INVERESK is a parish, including a village of the same name, together with Fisherrow and the important town of Musselburgh, already described. It is situate at the north-eastern extremity of the county, and possesses a soil peculiarly adapted for agricultural productions.
It has obtained the appellation of 'the Montpelier of Scotland,' from the salubrity of its air and the beauty of its prospects. Pinkie House, an ancient seat, erected by the first Earl of Dunfermline, stands in this district; it contains the great natural curiosity of 'the routing well,' so named from the extraordinary sounds which are emitted from it, previous to, or during a storm, resembling the noise of hammers mingled with the imitation of pattering hail. In this parish are found limestone, freestone, and coal, the latter particularly in abundance.

PATH-HEAD, CRANSTON, AND NEIGHBOURHOOD.

PATH-HEAD is a considerable village, partly in the parish of Crichton and partly in that of Crauston; 11 miles s. s. e. from Edinburgh, five from Dalkeith, and three from Fala; situate on both sides the Lauder, the great south-country and London road passing through it. The village is almost contiguous to that of Crichton (described, along with Heriot, at page 152). The principal street is broad and straight; and the houses, which are mostly of one story, are well built. The surrounding country abounds with beautiful scenery, and several seats of the gentry contribute in ornamenting the district.

POST OFFICE, PATH-HEAD, James Scott, Post Master.—The mail arrives every morning at eleven and afternoon at four, and is despatched every day at noon and night at nine.

The parish of CRANSTON (or Cranston) is intersected by the river Tyne, having Dalkeith and New-bottle on the north and west, and Crichton on the south; extending five miles in length by three in breadth, but very narrow in the middle. The lan is high and undulating, but is well cultivated and inclosed, and embellished with numerous delightful plantations. A very fine Gothic church, of white freestone, has within these few years been erected, to the south of the town of Dalkeith. The parish comprises the three small villages of Cranston, Cosland, and Preston, with part of Path-Head.

PENNYCUICK AND GLENCROSS.

PENNYCUICK is a well-built little village, in the parish of its name, situate on a high bank overhanging the north bank of the North Esk river, and on the road from Edinburgh to Peebles, about 9 1/2 miles s. w. of the former, 13 n. from the latter, and 9 s. s. w. from Dalkeith. Below the village, on the verge of the river, are extensive paper-mills. During the late war, the spot on which these mills are now at work was covered with barracks, for the reception of the French prisoners. The parish extends from eleven to twelve miles in length, and six in breadth, and is watered by the river Esk, which runs through its whole extent.

Towards the northern border, the parish includes a considerable part of the Pentland Hills, on which are pastured numerous flocks of sheep; the southern parts are more level and the soil is various. Penny-cuick House is an elegant edifice, built about 1761, by Sir James Clerk. There is a good collection of paintings in it; and Ossian's Hall, the work of Runciman, is much admired. Sir James also collected a considerable number of Roman antiquities. To the south of the house is an obelisk, erected to the memory of Allan Ramsay the poet, who frequently resided here. There is abundance of coal and lime-stone, the latter, occasionally so hard as to admit of a fine polish, and in which many petrifications are found; whinstone and freestone are also plentiful. In Carlops hill have been discovered specimens of lead and iron-ore, and ironstone. There are several chalybeate and petrifying springs in this quarter; and on the banks of the North Esk, near Spittal Hill, there is a well, the waters of which have a bitterish taste, and are drunk by the country people as a cure for bowel complaints. The ruins of some old castles, and several vestiges of encampments are pointed out in this district.

POST OFFICE, PENNYCUICK, Andrew Paterson, Post Master.—Letters from EDINBURGH arrive every morning at half-past ten, and are despatched every afternoon at a quarter past one.

PORTOBELLO AND JOPPA.

PORTOBELLO is a small town and watering place, in the parish of Duddingston, four miles eastward of the metropolis, on the main road to Berwick, and lying on the shore of the Frith of Forth. The rapidity with which this place has risen into importance and magnitude is quite unprecedented in Scotland; less than a century ago the site of this now flourishing little town appeared an unproductive waste, with a wide expanse of low sandy shore, uncheered by a single habitation; it now boasts several well-built streets, two extensive suites of baths, commodious markets, and good Inns. The houses are of various sizes and grades of elegance, to suit the different classes of visitors who resort hither for the purpose of sea-bathing; whilst the beach, a noble breadth of pure sand, affords at all times a fellicious access to the sea. These immediate local advantages, together with its proximity to the metropolis, combine to render Portobello a most desirable place for either temporary retirement or permanent residence. A considerable trade exists in the manufacture of flint glass, stoneware, bricks, tiles, paper and soap; and in the adjacent village of JOPPA, which is now almost a part of the town, are salt and chymical works. Portobello is governed by a provost, two bailies, and six councillors; and joins with Musselburgh and Leith in sending a member to parliament. The places of worship are an established church, and relief, secession, episcopal, independent, and Roman catholic chapels. The population (including that of Joppa) is estimated at about three thousand.

ABERDEENSHIRE.

THIS important and extensive county is situated in the north-east part of Scotland, and is bounded on the north and east by the North Sea; on the south, by the counties of Kincardine, Forfar, and Perth; and on the west by Inverness-shire and Banffshire. In form it approaches to that of an oval, the length of which, from north-east to south-west, is about 85 miles—and its extreme breadth about 40. It is estimated to comprise 1,950 square miles of land, and 10 of lakes. Towards the sea, the country is fertile, and comparatively level; but a great proportion of the county lies amidst the wildernesses of the central highlands. The county is popularly divided into five districts, viz.: MARR, the southernmost, comprehends all south of the river Dee, from the sea to the east end of the hill of Benochie; GARIOCH lies north of the Don, bounded by a ridge of hills beginning near the royal burgh of Kintore; STRATHBOGIE lies to the north-west of Garioch, and south-east of the upper part of Marr; FORMARTEN, east of Garioch, and bounded on the south by the Don, and on the north and east by the Ythan and the North Sea; BUCHAN, extending from the Ythan to the Deveron. These five districts are subdivided into lesser districts or divisions, whose names are generally descriptive of their appearance and situation. The district of Marr, on the confines of the shires of Banff, Inverness, Perth, and Angus, may be considered as the centre of Scotland, being at the greatest distance from the sea in every direction. The appearance of the upper part of this district is wild, rugged, and mountainous. Towards the east and north-east, the county becomes more level, but is in many places moorish and barren; but the woods, mostly fir, are extensive, producing fine timber. The rivers Don and Dee have both their sources in this quarter; and the castle of Braemar, once the family residence of the Earls of Marr, now the property of government, is in this district. From the top of Craighendaroch there is, perhaps, one of the most grand and picturesque views in Scotland. The district of Buchan is not so hilly, lying mostly on the east and north coasts; but, being almost destitute of wood, its appearance is bleak and naked: from the quantities, however, of large timber found in many mooses, no doubt can exist of its having been once well wooded. Anciently this extensive domain was the property of the Earls of Buchan, on whose attainder, in 1320, King Robert Bruce divided the land amongst his adherents. Subsequently the title was revived in the Erskine family, but without a restoration of the lands; and the present Earl has but little property in this quarter. The districts of Strathogie, Garioch, and Formarten, are generally well cultivated. At the termination of a deep glen in Strathdee is the pass, or craigs, of Bollitar, which forms the eastern entrance into the Grampian mountains. To the south of Peterhead are the remarkable breakers on the coast, called the Bullers of Buchan: they represent a large oval cavity, in depth about 100 feet, formed by the steep rocks on the coast; a natural arch opens into the sea at the eastern end, into which boats are sometimes drawn, and dashed to pieces. There is a characteristic difference to be observed in the inhabitants of Aberdeenshire from those of any other county in Scotland: they are in general regarded as an active, vigorous, and enterprising race; and when they emigrate, they seldom fail of success. The dialect of the inhabitants, too, is peculiar from those of the south of Scotland; and to a stranger's ear appears to be attended with a quick, sharp, and rather angry accent. On the sea-coasts they have a distinct difference of physiognomical appearance from other inhabitants of Scotland; and attest by this, as well as by their speech, that they are descended from a race which originally came from the northern regions of Europe, and fixed themselves in this part of Scotland.

COMMERCE, MANUFACTURES, MINERALS, &c.—The inhabitants of Aberdeenshire have ever been celebrated for their habits of industry; and it has been justly observed by those eminent topographers, Messrs. Chambers, in describing this county, that “man, woman, and child—every one works in Aberdeenshire.” The women have been long famous for the knitting of stockings; and those of the humbler class, even while carrying heavy burdens upon their backs, will be seen employing their hands in this useful labour. The making of linen and sail-cloth has been successfully introduced in several parts, and Aberdeen is the seat of various other branches of manufacture. The sea-coast abounds in fish of great variety and richness, and the river and sea fishing together form a great source of wealth to the inhabitants. Granite is a valuable and extensive production of this county, and presents an article of considerable traffic, many thousand tons being conveyed to London, and other distant parts, for paving and building purposes. Other minerals are found in different parts of Aberdeenshire, and are eminently worthy of notice:—in the parish of Old Machar has been discovered a valuable mine of manganese; Lesly produces amianthus, made by the peasants into snuffboxes and ornaments; plumbago has been found on the banks of the Deveron; and, near Peterhead, onyx pebbles are to be met with. The largest rock crystal ever found in Scotland was discovered upon the estate of Mr. Farquharson, of Invercauld, in this county; its size was nearly that of a child's body at the age of four years. On the same gentleman's lands have also been obtained amethysts and aqua marines, equal in colour and hardness to those so eagerly sought after in the East. Topazes of great value, provincially called Cairngoram stones, are also to be met with in Aberdeenshire. Talc, mica, asbestos, and amianthus, commonly called mountain cork, and mountain leather, are found in several of the hills, and in great variety. At Craig, in the district of Strathbogie, there is a fine flazen asbestos, both green and white. This county produces plenty of game, black cattle, deer, sheep, horses, &c. A very great proportion of the landholders reside permanently or occasionally on their estates, and countenance by their presence many valuable improvements. The rearing of plantations and fences, the introduction of superior breeds of cattle, and better modes of agriculture, have for some time engaged their attention, to the manifest advantage of the district. The patronage of the Highland Society, and other associations of a similar kind, have contributed most materially to assist these important objects. In the recesses of the country there are abundance of natural pines of stupendous height, fit for masts of the largest size—which, as the roads become improved, and the means of transit less difficult, may be rendered available to the uses for which they are so well adapted.

RIVERS, CANALS, AND SPRINGS.—The principal rivers of Aberdeenshire are the DEE, the DON, the YTHAN, the UGIE, and the DEVERON. These rivers are of great value, from the immense quantity and fineness of the salmon they produce; but are too rapid to admit of navigation to any great extent. The river Ythan deserves particular mention, on account of the pearl fishery, formerly carried on in it with great success. The Dee runs through the vale of Strathdee, surrounded with awful fronts of lofty mountains. On the Don are seen the princely ruins of Kildrummy Castle, another ancient seat of the Earls of Marr. At the top of the vale of Braemar, a short way above Marr Lodge, is the noted waterfall called the Linn of Dee. In the valley of Glanmuick there is likewise another picturesque cascade; and a little below, on the southern banks of the Dee, most romantically situated, are Pan-nich Wells, much frequented in summer. There are other sanitary springs at Peterhead, which possess chalybeate properties, and are in high repute.—The Aberdeenshire canal extends from the harbour of Aberdeen to the bridge over the river Don, near Inverury; and, since it was completed, has opened a new field of industry, enterprise, and wealth, to the inhabitants of the districts of Garioch and Strathbogie. On the sea-shore are several remarkable caves, curious perforations in the rocks, and echoes which reverberate sounds with wonderful distinctness.

This shire contains eighty-five parishes, and three Royal Burghs—ABERDEEN, KINTORE, and INVERURY. One member is returned to parliament for the county, and one for the city of Aberdeen; the contributory borroughs (or those which, in conjunction with others, are represented in the senate,) belonging to this county, are Inverury, Kintore, and Peterhead. The mansions of the nobility and gentry are numerous, and some of the first and most ancient families of Scotland have seats in this county.

The mountains of greatest altitude in Aberdeenshire are, Buck, 2,377; Firmouth, 2,500; Cairneach, and Scroneach, 2,700; Morven, 3,100; Montkeen, 3,180; Lochnagar, 3,800; Benaven, 3,920; Ben-aburd, 3,940; Cairntoul, 4,220; Macdui, or Ben-Macdui, 4,300, and Braeriach, 4,304 feet above the level of the sea; besides several others of less but considerable elevation.

TOTAL POPULATION OF ABERDEENSHIRE..... 123082 135075 155387 177600 56203

The Total annual value of Real Property, in this County, as assessed in April, 1815, amounted to £325,218.

ABERDEEN.

THIS city, the capital of the county to which it gives name, is situate 109 miles nearly north from Edinburgh, 103 s. e. by e. of Inverness, and 501 from London. It is a very ancient town, and is supposed to have been known to the Romans by the name of Devana. Antecedently to this period, all relating to any history of Aberdeen, or its origin, is involved in obscurity; and, for many ages after, no records appear to afford any authentic accounts relating to this city. Aberdeen is probably among the earliest of the burghs in Scotland found entitled to any royal mark of distinction; and, from various circumstances occurring in history, it is reasonable to presume that, at a very early period, it was comparatively respectable as a place of some commerce. As far back as the year 1153 it seems to have been known as such to the Normans; and, in Macpherson's treatise on commerce, it is observed that, in the year 1179, Esteyn, one of the joint kings of that country, lauded and pillaged the town, in the course of a piratical cruise along the British coast. In early times Aberdeen was frequently honoured by the presence of royalty; and it appears that King William, surnamed the Lion, had an edifice for his occasional residence here, which was situate at the lower side of the town, near the east end of what is called the Green, and was dignified with the title of Palace: this edifice he afterwards bestowed on the monks of the Holy Trinity, who were about that time introduced into Scotland. The first charter that was obtained by Aberdeen is supposed to have originated about the year 1179, and granted by King William, which confirmed to the burgesses the power of enjoying their trade of merchandise as freely, quietly, fully, and honourably as their ancestors did in the time of Malcolm, his grandfather; this charter was dated at Perth. King William afterwards granted two other charters: both these, which were dated at Aberdeen, 28th August, are still in a state of good preservation, and have the great seal of Scotland, in green wax, appended to each. From these documents, and other historical accounts, it is beyond all doubt that trade and commerce were a prevailing pursuit at that time, which have progressively extended themselves to this period, by the industry and enterprising spirit so long characteristic of the inhabitants. This is now the third city in Scotland in population, rank and opulence, and may justly be called the capital of the north of Scotland.—Aberdeen is pleasantly situate upon an eminence rising gradually from the sea—the beach presenting a beautiful even surface of fine hard sand. When the tide is receding, a person may walk for many miles along the shore, and contemplate a noble expanse of the German ocean, which, from the town, has the grandest effect, and adds to the beauty of its picturesque situation. The new streets are spacious, uniform, and elegant; the houses are all built of granite stone, which the neighbourhood produces. A noble street, named Union-street, running to the south, is particularly handsome. About the middle of this fine street, a magnificent granite bridge, of one arch, spanning 130 feet, is thrown across a ravine, through which runs a brook called the Deuburn, which forms one of the boundaries of the city liberties, and divides the older parts of it from the more modern and fashionable. This latter part has been all built within the last twenty-five years, and is of very considerable extent.

PUBLIC BUILDINGS.—The Town-house, Gaol, and new Court-house are situate in Castle-street. In the Town-house is the town's armoury, in which are deposited about 300 stands of muskets, an ancient coat of mail, the standard carried by the citizens at the battle of Harlow, and other warlike instruments: also the axe of the machine known by the name of the maiden, which in times of old was used for decapitating criminals, and the furniture of the provost's charger, when he attended, as commissioner for the town, at the coronation of King Charles I, at Edinburgh. Some years ago an act of parliament was obtained, authorising the erection of a new court-house and gaol, at the expense of the city and county, which were immediately proceeded with according to the plan furnished by Mr.

John Smith, architect. The court-house was commenced in the year 1818, and first opened in 1820. It stands behind the town-house, and is connected with it; the principal entrance is from Castle-street, by a Gothic door-way, and a handsome stone stair leads to the vestibule of the court, on the first floor. The Bridewell is situate towards the west of the town, and is surrounded with a wall fourteen feet high, enclosing a garden, and airing grounds for the use of the prisoners. The entrance is from Union-street, through a handsome gateway, to which are attached a porter's lodge and a guard-house. The Public Assembly or County Rooms, intended chiefly for the accommodation of the united meetings of the counties of Aberdeen, Banff, Kincardine, and Forfar, are in Union-street, near the entrance of the town from the south. This elegant edifice is decorated with a portico of six columns of the Ionic order, thirty feet in height. The principal entrance, under the portico, leads into an outer vestibule, having a flight of six steps leading to the grand saloon, which is sixty feet in length and twenty feet in breadth, and is divided into three compartments by fluted Ionic columns, with ornamented capitals, and corresponding pilasters. The centre part is thirty-two feet high, and the ceiling is a dome finished with coffering. In the middle of the building, and opening into the saloon, through a screen of columns, is a spacious gallery or promenade, seventy feet in length, finished with pilasters, and an arched and panelled ceiling. It communicates on one side with the ball room, and on the other side with the supper, or refreshment-room, and the card saloon. The end of the gallery opens into the banquetting room, which is of the same dimensions with the ball room; the walls are finished with pilasters in imitation of Sienna marble, with ornamented capitals. The whole forms a splendid suite of rooms opening into each other by folding doors, and presenting vistas the full length of the building. The expense of erection was £11,500; the foundation stone was laid on the 26th of April, 1820, by the Right Hon. James Earl of Fife. The Market Cross, near the western extremity of Castle-street, cannot be too highly admired, whether as an architectural object or as an antiquarian curiosity. It is of hexagonal form, with a pillar rising from the centre. In a cornice around the upper part of the structure are twelve compartments for figures cut in relief: ten of these contain the portraits of Scottish monarchs—the last of the series being James VII., in whose time the edifice was completed. This fine erection was once removed by the magistrates as a nuisance, but was afterwards restored by civic authorities of better taste. The Theatre, in Marischal-street, is finished in a very neat style, and has accommodation for about six hundred persons; this erection cost near £3,000. The Custom-house, which is a plain building, is situate on the Quay, and near the bottom of Marischal-street; formerly only part of the house was required for business, but latterly, owing to the increased trade of the place, the whole is found necessary. The Barracks, on the Castle-hill, are fitted up for the convenience of six hundred men, although, according to the usual mode of military accommodation, it is capable of containing double this number; there is an excellent hospital attached to it, on an adjoining hill.

TRADE AND COMMERCE.—The port of Aberdeen is admirably adapted for commercial intercourse with the northern parts of Europe, and it also participates in a good share of trade with America and the West Indies. Several whale-fishing companies of great respectability are established here, who employ a number of ships in that trade. On the north side of the entrance to the harbour, a fine stone pier extends two thousand feet into the sea, the entire composed of granite. Many of the stones of the outside walls are upwards of three tons in weight, with dressed beds, and generally four feet long. The whole of this grand piece of masonry forms one solid mass, and is an improvement of the most beneficial character to the shipping interests of the port. On the opposite side of the entrance to the harbour, is a breakwater, which projects from the land about 800 feet, rather to the northward; it extends partly across the channel of the harbour, and is a great protection from the violence of storms from the south-east. In the interior of the harbour a new wharf, nearly a mile in extent, has been completed along the north side of the harbour, and a corresponding wharf on the south side is in progress. Between the harbour and the bed of the river Dee an island has been formed, where it is intended to have wet and dry docks. The tonnage of shipping belonging to Aberdeen amounts to 27,274 tons. A fine canal runs from the quay for a length of eighteen miles to the river Don. This valuable undertaking was opened in the year 1807. A regular communication is maintained with London, Edinburgh, Inverness and the Orkneys, by steam packets, a species of conveyance which has done more to lay open the north-east shore of Scotland to improvements from the south than any other means. The principal importations of Aberdeen consist of wheat and flour, barley, rum, geneva, brandy, French, Spanish, and Portuguese wines, English and Scotch coal, wool, salt, tobacco, flax, timber, &c. The exports are oats, meal, salmon, ling, stockings, woollen cloth, linens, tapes, threads, stones, &c. There are many very important establishments in the town and its vicinity, as large cotton mills, linen and woollen manufactories, extensive thread and tape works, cotton printing and bleach works, paper mills, iron foundries, ship yards, breweries, &c. A new application of the power of steam has been discovered, by Mr. M'Donald, of King-street, by which the granite raised in the neighbourhood is made to bear a polish equal to marble. The first indication of manufactures was noticed about the end of the sixteenth century, when a Fleming was permitted to settle and exercise his occupation of a manufacturer of programs, worsted, and stamings (tammies), on condition of taking an apprentice to the town to be taught the trade. In the seventeenth century, the manufacture of woollen goods became very prevalent. The chief articles made for exportation were stockings and mits, and woollen plaids—the latter to a very considerable extent. It is estimated that twenty thousand persons derive support from the manufacture and sale of woollen goods in the county of Aberdeen. Linen manufactures were introduced by a company in 1749, and very soon became an important branch. Although the commerce of this city has been subjected to incidental fluctuations, yet, on the whole, it has rapidly increased of late years, and is still being extended. The proverbial cautiousness of the Aberdonians has saved them from participating in reverses which have been experienced in other places, where there have been more speculation than capital. The fishing trade is very extensive, and may be named in three classes, viz:—the whale fishing, the salmon fishing, and the white fishing. The salmon that are caught in the Don and Dee, have long been celebrated for quality and abundance. The white fishing consists in the taking of haddock, cod, turbot, hallibut, &c. of which there is generally an abundant supply in the market. Much praise is due to the magistrates of the city for the encouragement bestowed on persons employed in the fishery; and a town of modern erection called Foot Dee, near the mouth of the harbour, affords accommodation to the fishermen and their families.

The MUNICIPAL GOVERNMENT.—The burghal constitution of Aberdeen has undergone various alterations since its first establishment. The original magistracy consisted of an alderman, four bailies, and a common council, chosen by the inhabitants; subsequently this arrangement gave way before the gradual and perfect introduction of a self-electing system. Till the year 1826, the city revenues were gathered and dispensed by a trustee for behoof of creditors. The credit of the burgh may now be considered as good as that of any other in the kingdom. In 1830, its revenues produced a surplus of £2,500, being a larger sum than the entire revenue of thirty years before. From the city accounts published in 1836 it appears that the total revenue of the burgh of Aberdeen, for the year ending 15th October, was £18,396. 10s.; and that the total expenditure for the same period was £17,519. 4s. 11d.—leaving a clear surplus of £877. 5s. 1d.; whereof there was on the treasury £552. 15s. 11d., and on other funds £324. 9s. 2d. Under the reform system the government of the city is vested in a body corporate, consisting of a provost and four bailies, a dean of guild and treasurer, with a council of seven deacons of the incorporated trades. The police establishment consists of a board of thirteen commissioners, who appear to pay every attention to their onerous duties. The town is paved with granite, well lighted with gas, and is supplied with abundance of excellent water. The arrangements for watching and for cleaning the streets are excellent. Aberdeen confers the title of Earl on a branch of the noble family of Gordon, which was distinguished for its active loyalty to the crown in the seventeenth century. The city returns one member to parliament: the present representative is Alexander Bannerman, Esq.

THE MUNICIPAL INSTITUTIONS consist of seven incorporated trades: 1st, the Hammer-men, incorporated September, 1519; 2nd, the Bakers, recognised as a company as early as the year 1398; 3rd, the Wrights and Coopers, who obtained their original seal of cause on the 5th of August, 1527; 4th, the Tailors, who were recognised in a corporate capacity about the year 1511; 5th, the Shoemakers, acknowledged as a corporate body in the years 1484 and 1520; 6th, the Weavers—the deacons of this corporation were approved by the council and sworn into office in the year 1449; and, 7th, the Fleshers, or Butchers: these originally dealt in fish as well as flesh—but were prohibited, in the year 1518, from practising more trades than one; they received a seal of cause in 1534. The affairs of each corporation are under the direction of a deacon, box-master, and masters, who are chosen annually. In the year 1609 a common fund was instituted by the corporations, intended to afford pecuniary relief to members contributing to it, if they should happen to be reduced to indigence. The Society of Advocates was erected into a corporate body in 1774, and had their privileges confirmed in more ample terms in 1799. A library, principally on law subjects, was established in 1786; the books are kept in an apartment in the new court-house; the number of members belonging to this institution is considerably above 100. A new hall, for the use of this Society, is now building in Union-st. There are two clubs, one, called the "County Club," consists exclusively of noblemen and landed proprietors of the county, established for the purpose of promoting social intercourse, and of contributing pecuniary aid to the distressed; it is a society of long standing and high respectability. The other club is termed the "Golf Club," from the name of a game peculiar to Scotland.

PLACES OF WORSHIP.—East and West Churches.—These form one building, and occupy the site of the ancient parish church of St. Nicholas, which was probably first built about the middle of the 12th century. The original church was progressively built at various periods; and the only part of the fabric now remaining is the transept, with the superincumbent belfry and steeple. The present West Church occupies the site of the ancient nave, and was erected about ninety years ago from a design by the celebrated architect Gibbs, a native of Aberdeen. It is in the Italian style, and accommodates about 1,700 persons. There are several monuments in it worthy of attention, particularly one to the memory of Mrs. Allardyce, of Dunnotar, which is a splendid specimen of the talents of Bacon. The old East Church, founded in 1477, which it was deemed necessary lately to take down, stood on the site of the original chancel of the church. The new church, from a design by Mr. Archibald Simpson, is built of granite, on the foundations of the old, and is a beautifully chaste specimen of the simple Gothic style. It is calculated to accommodate 1,700 persons, and is so constructed that the pulpit is visible from every sitting. The roof of the interior is lofty, and adorned with the appropriate ornaments of the antique Gothic hall. The building combines, in an eminent degree, convenience of arrangement with simple elegance of design.—The South Church is situate in Belmont-street, and is calculated to accommodate 1,600 persons; it is in the Gothic style, and is distinguished by a handsome and lofty tower, which forms a striking object in the approach from the south. The North Church, placed in King-street, is a handsome building in the Grecian order, executed in finely dressed granite; it will sit a congregation of 1,200. These two (south and north) churches were planned by Mr. John Smith, architect.—Old Machar Church, at the north extremity of Old Aberdeen, in the parish of Old Machar, consists of the nave of a cathedral founded by Bishop Alexander Kynmunde II., about the middle of the 14th century. The ceiling is of the finest oak, of excellent and curious workmanship, and may vie with any thing of the kind in Scotland. It consists of three compartments of square panels, joining at the opposite angular points; on these panels are painted the arms and titles of the princes, nobles, and prelates who contributed towards the expense of the building. Along the top of the walls, on the south side, are inscribed the names of the successive sovereigns, from Malcolm II. to Queen Mary; on the north side are the names of the several bishops, from Nectanus to William Gordon, the last Roman catholic prelate. All these inscriptions, as well as those on the roof, are painted in the old black Saxon character. This church, within these few years, has been renovated in a very tasteful style.—St. Clement's Chapel, or Foot Dee Church, has a tower 45 feet high, with a clock, presented by the magistrates.—Grey Friars', or College Church, situate on the east of Broad-street, near Marischal College, is said to have been erected by Bishop Dunbar, for the grey friars, about the beginning of the 16th century; and is now the only church in town where the Roman catholic worship was performed previously to the reformation.—St. Paul's Chapel was erected in 1721, for the accommodation of such of the Episcopalians as refused to submit to the jurisdiction of Scottish bishops. It contains sittings for 1,000 persons. It has for some time been in contemplation to erect a new chapel.—St. Andrew's, or Scotch Episcopalian Chapel, an elegant edifice, in which is performed the service of the church of England, was built in 1813, from a design by Mr. Archibald Simpson, architect. It occupies the centre of the east side of King-street; the gable, or end, fronts the street, presenting a centre and side aisles, the corners of which are ornamented with lofty octagonal turrets, those on each side of the entrance being upwards of 80 feet in height. The turrets are finished with panelling and richly crocketed pinnacles. The entrance-gate is embellished with clustered columns and crocketed mouldings, and the windows are finished with tracery in a corresponding style. The interior presents a simple style of Gothic architecture, corresponding with the entrance front. At the west end is a large and fine-toned organ, underneath which is a handsome monument to the memory of the late Bishop Skinner.—St. John's Chapel, for Scotch Episcopalian, has a small spire on the north end, and will contain about 500 persons; the interior has undergone much alteration and repair.—St. Peter's, the Roman Catholic Chapel, built by the present incumbent, the Rev. Charles Gordon, in 1803, is situate at the north-east end of Castle-street, at the bottom of a court. The interior is handsomely fitted up, and has accommodation for 800 persons; it has the advantage of an excellent organ, and an exceedingly well-trained choir. There is, in connexion with the chapel, a very handsome school-house in Constitution-street, erected in 1832, in which are educated catholic children belonging to the congregation.—In addition to these places of worship, there are others belonging to various denominations of dissenters; for the names and situations of which we must refer our readers to the list given at page 190, where will be found also the name of the officiating minister.

The CHARITABLE, BENEVOLENT, SCHOLASTIC, AND SCIENTIFIC INSTITUTIONS and the HUMANE and FRIENDLY SOCIETIES—are, indeed, most numerous in this city, and laudably supported: a list of all such will be found under the head of "Public Buildings, &c.," whilst those most prominent and important are more particularly described. The reading and news rooms are exceedingly well conducted. The Athenæum, in Union-buildings; the Union Club-room, in the County Rooms; and Coffee and Reading Rooms, 62, Castle-street, are the principal of these establishments:

there are also several respectable circulating libraries. Three weekly newspapers issue from the Aberdeen press, namely, the Journal, published on Wednesday, the Observer, on Friday, and the Herald, on Saturday; they all rank deservedly high in the scale of circulation and patronage. The Journal has been established in the same family (David Chalmers, Esq., is the present proprietor) for ninety years. The first almanacks ever printed in Scotland were published at Aberdeen in 1677, by a printer named John Forbes: it was entitled a "New Prognosticator, calculated for North Britain." He sold 50,000 copies annually, and the price of each was only a plack, or the third part of a penny sterling. His success induced the publication of pirated editions at Edinburgh, which were very properly put down by the court of session, and for many years the town enjoyed a complete monopoly in the sale of almanacks; and to this day the common penny almanacks printed at Edinburgh and other places retain the title of "Aberdeen Almanacks."

UNIVERSITIES, COLLEGES, SCHOOLS, &c.—The Universities of Aberdeen are very ancient seminaries of learning, particularly the King's College, in Old Aberdeen, and Marischal College, situate in Broad-street. The former was first instituted in the year 1494, by a bull of Pope Alexander the VI, dated at Rome, February 10th. The original foundation charter is still extant in the charter chest of the college. The library, to which all the students have free access, is a very valuable collection of books; the museum, also for their use, is furnished with an extensive assemblage of Greek and Roman coins, specimens in mineralogy and zoology, fine engravings, and a good assortment of most things interesting in natural history. The students wear a scarlet cloth gown, with hanging sleeves, but do not reside within the college. The building forms a quadrangular court; the east end is a plain structure, containing the public hall and class-rooms underneath; the north-east corner is a lofty building of six stories. On the north side are the public school and library hall. On the south-west corner is a lofty square tower, strengthened by buttresses, and covered with a flat roof, having on the top a parapet, over which springs from each of its corners a slip of stone-work highly ornamented. These slips meet at the top, and form four open arches, in imitation of an imperial crown. On the top of this is a stone lantern, surmounted by another imperial crown of stone-work, with a globe and cross. The tower formerly contained a peal of thirteen bells. The south side of the court consists of a plain building, 112 feet long, with a piazza underneath; there was anciently a round tower at each end, but one only now remains. The common hall is ornamented with portraits of Bishops Elphinston, Dunbar, &c. The erection of these buildings commenced about the year 1500.

The Marischal College and University is situate in Broad-street, and was founded and endowed by George, Earl Marischal of Scotland, by charter dated the 2nd day of April, 1583. This college has no public connexion with the King's College at Old Aberdeen, but the students wear the same sort of gown, with the difference of a red velvet collar. A grant has recently been obtained from government, in aid of private subscriptions to a considerable amount, for the purpose of erecting a new college immediately in rear of the old, which it is found necessary to take down. The new college will be a spacious, elegant, and convenient building, in the Gothic style, from a design by Mr. Archibald Simpson, architect. It will form three sides of a square of 100 feet. From the centre of the middle compartment will spring a lofty tower, surmounted by an observatory; the public hall and museum extending the whole length of one of the sides—the approach to them is by a noble staircase of polished granite. The philosophical apparatus belonging to this college, is, perhaps, the finest and most extensive in the kingdom. The museum contains many curious specimens in natural history and antiquities, and an extensive collection of antique coins. The library, which is rather select than extensive, contains some beautifully illuminated manuscripts. The Grammar School, at School hill, is a neat modern building, forming three sides of a square, with a belfry in the centre. It contains a public hall, and four teaching rooms on one floor. This building stands on part of the ground which formerly belonged to the Dominican friars. The institution is of very ancient origin, and has produced many eminent scholars.—Robert Gordon's Hospital, School hill, is a spacious building, standing on the ground anciently possessed by the Dominican friars, and having an extensive piece of ground in front. It consists of a centre or main building, and two wings. The original structure occupies the greater part of the centre, and is three stories in height, having a small but near spire rising from it. The hall is on the second floor, and is 30 feet long by 19½ feet wide, and 12 feet high. This edifice was erected in 1739, after a design by Gibbs, at an expense of £3,300. The remaining part of the centre and the wings are new, and were completed in 1832, from a design by Mr. Smith, architect, at an expense of about £11,000. The new erection is in the Grecian style of architecture, presenting a chaste and elegant appearance. The more ancient part has been altered to correspond; and a colonnade now traverses the building from the old house to the projecting fronts at the ends of the wings. The ground in front, which is tastefully laid out, much improves the appearance of the edifice. There are generally 130 boys in the institution, but there is accommodation for 250.—The Trades' Hospital was founded in 1632, by Dr. Gould, one of the town's ministers, and afterwards principal of King's College. It consists of two floors, the upper of which is occupied as a hall, where the trades hold their meetings. The hall, which is 64 feet long, 17 feet broad, and 17 feet high, contains several portraits. In the year 1633, Dr. Gould granted to the members of the town's corporations the monastery and other property, which had formerly belonged to the monks of the Holy Trinity, for the benefit of their indigent brethren; the town council also gave 1000 merks, and the different corporations made liberal contributions. There has lately been attached to the old building a considerable addition, containing school rooms, &c. The New Infirmary, which is situate on the Woolman hill, has recently been erected, and consists of a central compartment and projecting wings, the length in front being about 150 feet, and the breadth 112. The building rises to the height of three lofty stories, the lowest containing the requisite offices for the establishment—and the other floors, wards and private apartments. There is accommodation for 220 patients. One of the wings is so contrived that it may be used as a separate fever-hospital. In the centre of the upper part of the front is a spacious operation-room, lighted from above through a dome of 30 feet in diameter. The whole is designed in a simple style of Grecian architecture, and executed in dressed granite. From the elegance of the design and the beauty of the materials, as well as the situation of the building, it forms an ornamental feature of the city from various points of view, and is allowed to be a highly creditable proof of the skill of the architect, Mr. Archibald Simpson, to whose talents the city is indebted for some of its most tasteful public buildings and private mansions.—The Lunatic Asylum consists of two buildings, one of which was raised in 1800, the other in 1819. The insufficiency of the old building for the purposes of the institution rendering the erection of a more spacious and commodious one necessary, an adjoining field of three acres was purchased, and an elegant edifice erected according to a plan given in by Mr. Archibald Simpson.—The Poor's Hospital, for boys, is situate in Upper Kirkgate; that for girls in the Gallowgate.—The Medical Society's Hall, King-street, has a handsome front, with a portico of four Ionic columns. It contains a library and museum, a large room for the meetings of the society, committee-room, &c. It was built in 1818, at a cost of 2,000*l.*, from the plan of the architect of the Infirmary. In the hall are some portraits; among the rest an original painting of Harvey, by Vandyck. There are also two by T. Giles, Esq. R.A., which are both favourable specimens of the skill of this distinguished native artist.

The weekly market is held on Friday. The annual fairs are, Paschal market on the last Wednesday in April, and a fair the last Wednesday in August—at Old Aberdeen the fairs are the last Thursday in April and the Wednesday after the third Tuesday in October, old style.

OLD ABERDEEN stands about a mile to the north of the city, on an eminence on the south bank of the river Don—in the parish of Old Machar, of which it is the capital. Formerly this town was the seat of the Bishop of Aberdeen, but now derives its only importance from King's college, & the Cathedral. Its charter was renewed by George I., when a power was conferred of electing its own magistrates, which are now a provost, three bailies, a treasurer, and council, with the deacons of six incorporated trades. The principal curiosity in the neighbourhood is the old bridge, which crosses the river Don by one Gothic pointed arch—the only structure of the kind in Scotland, if not in the united kingdom. Mr. Kennedy, in his "Annals of Aberdeen," states it to have been erected by Robert Bruce. The parish of Old Machar lies in the peninsula betwixt the Dee and the Don where they join the ocean; its length is about seven or eight miles, and its greatest breadth four. The land rises in a gentle slope from the sea, and is beautifully diversified by undulating grounds. The windings of the Dee and the Don—the manufactories and the woods on the banks of the latter, interspersed with many gentlemen's seats and villas—together with the numerous admirable prospects of the sea—impart a pleasing variety to the general appearance of the parish. Great improvements in agriculture, at a very considerable expense, have been effected, which have been the means materially to enhance the value of the land, and beautify the neighbourhood of Aberdeen.

Formerly the whole city was comprehended in the single parish of St. Nicholas, which has latterly been subdivided into six parishes, which contained (including Old Machar with Old Aberdeen), in the year 1801, 27,508 inhabitants; and in 1831, 58,019—of which last number 32,912 were comprehended in the several quarters of Crooked, Even, Foot-Dee and Green.

ALFORD, GLENBUCKET, KEIG, KILDRUMMY,

MIDMARR, TOUGH, TOWIE, AND TULLYNESSLE WITH FORBES.

THE village of ALFORD is 27 miles from Aberdeen, and 18 from Huntly. The parish, which is seven miles in length and about three in breadth, contains several cairns, two of which are of great extent. The village is the seat of a presbytery. Fairs are held on the first Mondays in January, February, March, April, October, November, and December, new style; and the second Friday in September, old style.

GLENBUCKET is a small Highland parish, in the district of Marr, 29 miles from Huntly, situate on both sides the Bucket, a tributary stream to the Don; and extending four miles in length, by about one in breadth. The ruins of Badenyon house, alluded to in the popular Scotch song of "John of Badenyon," is in the parish.

KEIG, a small parish intersected by the Don, is nearly of circular form, and between three and four miles in diameter. Castle Forbes, the seat of Lord Forbes, is in this parish, surrounded by thriving plantations, besides a natural wood of considerable extent; the seat commands a fine view of the windings of the river Don for many miles. The parish is about 25 miles from Aberdeen.

KILDRUMMY parish is situate in a valley, distant 35 miles from Aberdeen, and 16 from Huntly. The castle of Kildrummy, which anciently belonged to David Earl of Huntingdon and Garioch, and was a seat of King Robert Bruce, which served as a place of retreat to his queen in the winter of 1306, is a ruin of great antiquity, and appears to have been strongly fortified.

POST OFFICE, TULLYNESSLE, Andrew Wilson, Post Master.—Letters from all parts arrive (by mail gig) from ABERDEEN, every forenoon at eleven, and are despatched every morning at nine.

 To RHYNE and STRATHDON, the Lord Forbes (from Aberdeen) calls at the above Inn, every afternoon (Sunday excepted) at six.

AUCHTERLESS, FORGUE, MONQUHITTER, AND INVERKEITHNY.

AUCHTERLESS, a parish situate about midway between Aberdeen and Banff, is about seven miles long and three broad; the soil is in general productive, and is watered by the river Ythan. The vestiges of an extensive fortified camp, the inclosed area of which is computed at 120 acres, are well worthy the attention of the antiquary.

FORGUE is a parish nine miles in length, and its greatest breadth about six; its situation is north-west of Huntly, and it is intersected by two rivulets, the Fendraught and the Forgue. The soil in the lower parts produces good crops, but towards the south the ground is mostly covered with heath. On several of the estates much has been done in planting and improving the wastes.

MONQUHITTER, a parish, extends about nine miles from north to south, and six from east to west;

bounded by Turriff on the west, King Edward on the north, New Deer on the east, and Fyvie on the south. The surface is uneven, and arable in the lower parts; the district was once very mossy and moorish, but has been considerably improved. The parish is watered by two small rivers; one of these discharges itself into the Ythan, and the other into the Deveron; both abound with delicious trout.

INVERKEITHNY, a parish in the south-eastern corner of Banffshire, lies on the right or south bank of the Deveron, along which it extends about six miles, and measures from one to four miles in breadth. Marnoch bounds it on the north, Turriff and Auchterless on the east, Forgue on the south, and Rothiemay on the west. The district is chiefly hilly and pastoral.—(For particulars of the population see Banffshire.)

CRATHIE AND BRAEMAR, WITH CASTLETOWN.

CRATHIE, or Crathly, an extensive mountainous parish in the heart of Marr, among the Grampian mountains, incorporating the suppressed parish of BRAEMAR; jointly they comprise a territory 40 miles in length by 20 in breadth. It is a district supposed to be more elevated above the level of the sea, and farther distant from the coast in every direction, than any other parochial district of Scotland. On some of the mountains snow may be found all the year round. Ben-Macduie, 4,300 feet in height, is among the stupendous eminences in this quarter. Nearly the whole of this district was once covered with wood, and was called the forest of Marr, which, with those of the Duke of Athol in Perthshire, and the Duke of Gordon in Badenoch and Glenaven, constituted the principal part of the great Caledonian forest. In Braemar a considerable portion of the wood still remains, which is well stocked with deer. Here the Dee takes its rise, and runs through the whole of the district. The principal lakes are Loch Callader and Loch Brotachan.

which contain trout, salmon, and eels. The great military road from Blagowrie to Fort George passes through the whole extent. On this line is the village of CASTLETOWN, near which are the ruins of an old castle, said to have been a hunting-seat of King Malcolm Canmore. The village is divided by the river Cluny—the one side of the water, called AUCHEN-DRYNE, belonging to the Earl of Fife—the other to Mr. Farquharson, of Invercauld. On one side of the river is the 'Fife Arms,' and on the other the 'Invercauld Arms,' both excellent inns; at the former is the post-office. At a short distance from Castletown is the castle of Braemar, once garrisoned by King William, and burnt in the contest which took place between the royal forces and the Earl of Marr; it was rebuilt in 1749, and till within the last five years was occupied by government troops, to prevent the smuggling which was so frequent in this district. This part contains inexhaustible quarries of limestone and of fine slate.

POST OFFICE, Fife Arms Inn, CASTLETOWN of BRAEMAR, from all parts arrive (by foot post) from BALLATER every evening at ½ past 6, & are despatched every night at 10.

CRIMOND, LONMAY, RATHEN AND ST. FERGUS.

CRIMOND, a parish, nearly at an equal distance from the towns of Fraserburgh and Peterhead, is situated upon the coast of Buchan, with a front to the German ocean of about three miles in breadth, which declines to a point, inland, at the distance of rather more than five miles. Rattray Head is on this coast, a very dangerous promontory. Near the east end of the lake of Strathgord is a small hill, called the Castle hill, where Comyn, Earl of Buchan, had a castle. About a hundred years ago there was a communication between the loch of Strathgord and the sea; and a harbour at the east end, close by the castle, for small craft: in one night the mouth of the harbour was filled up by the drifting of sand, and the communication has been interrupted ever since. On this harbour formerly stood the burgh of Rattray.

The parish of LONMAY, having about four miles of sea-coast, is ten miles long, and nearly four broad. The soil is various, but generally fertile; and there are two fishing villages on the estate of Mr. Gordon, of Bothlaw, who has lately built an elegant seat at Cairness, the pleasure-grounds and plantations of which are laid out with great taste. A considerable branch of the Ugie passes through the parish, which abounds in limestone.

RATHEN parish is about three miles distant from Fraserburgh, about seven miles long, at a medium of two in breadth; it possesses two creeks, on each of which is built a fishing village. There are two old castles in ruins at Cairnbnig and Inverallochie, which seem to have been places of considerable strength. This parish is destitute of growing timber, though large masses of oak are occasionally dug up from the morasses.

ST. FERGUS, a village and parish, though locally situate on the coast of Aberdeenshire, is in that part of the district of Buchan which belongs to the county of Banff. It is bounded on the east by the North Sea, and on the south by the small river Ugie, which separates it from Peterhead; it is five miles distant from that town, and 13 from Fraserburgh. The great Field Marshal Keith was born, in 1696, at Inverugie castle, the ruins of which, in a bend of the river, still attract the notice of the traveller.

ECHT, DRUMOAK, KINSELLAR, NEWHILLS,

PETERCULTER AND SKENE.

ECHT, a parish 12 miles west of Aberdeen, is about five miles in length and the same in breadth; it is a hilly district, but having a large proportion of the land under cultivation. Fairs, first Wednesdays in January, February, March, April, October, November, and December, new style; and second Friday in September, old style.

DRUMOAK, a parish chiefly in Aberdeenshire (a small portion extending across the Dee into Kincardineshire), is about four miles long and two broad. The surface is hilly, a great part being fit only for sheep-pasture; while the arable land is shallow; and produces scanty crops. The tower of Drum is a very ancient edifice.

KINSELLAR is a small parish, on the south side of the Don, distant from Aberdeen about nine miles and a half; and comprises an irregular assemblage of hills of considerable elevation, the summits of which are mostly covered with small plantations of firs.

NEWHILLS is a parish of an irregular hexagonal form, six miles and a half in diameter, and distant from Aberdeen five miles, the river Don forming its boundary on the north-east. In this parish the general appearance of the country is hilly, and towards the west becomes mountainous; granite abounds here.

PETERCULTER parish is about eight miles in length, and six in breadth; the surface is rugged and uneven, with hills and valleys, rocky eminences and marshy flats, interspersed. On the banks of the Dee, and its tributary streams, however, the soil is tolerably fertile. On the summit of the hill of Oldtown are the remains of a rectangular encampment.

SKENE, a parish in Aberdeenshire, about eight miles west from Aberdeen, is about eight miles in length, and four at its extreme breadth. On the south is the Luchar Burn, a tributary stream of the Dee, issuing from Loch Skene, a small lake; and in a north-west direction from thence is Skene House, belonging to the Earl of Fife—an elegant country residence, surrounded by some thriving plantations.

AND LOGIE BUCHAN.

ELLON parish extends about nine miles in length from north to south, and five in breadth; the surface is uneven, and there are many rising grounds, the height of which is considerable. The village of Ellon is about 16 miles N.E. of Aberdeen, pleasantly situate on the river Ythan, which is crossed here by a handsome bridge. The chief employment of the women and children is spinning, and knitting stockings. The Ythan, which is navigable for large boats within half a mile of the village, abounds with salmon.

BELHELVIE is a parish on the sea-coast, in the district of Formarten, eight miles from Aberdeen. The aspect of the country is very unfavourable, especially at a distance from the sea-coast, where it exhibits nothing but heath and stones; towards the sea, however, there is some arable land, and perhaps the greater part is susceptible of cultivation.

CRUDEN parish is situate on the east coast of the district of Buchan, extending from eight to nine miles along the shore, and about seven miles inland. The soil is various; a large proportion being a deep rich clay, while the remainder is light and gravelly, with some mosses. Slaines castle, the seat of the Earl of Errol, a large edifice on a precipice overhanging the sea, is in this parish. In the village, which is about

FRASERBURGH,

A respectable sea-port town and burgh of regality, in the parish of its name, is 151 miles N.E. of Edinburgh, 42 N.E. of Aberdeen, 22 E. of Banff (26 by the new road), and 18 N.W. of Peterhead; situate on the south side of Kinnaird Head, which is a bold promontory, with a lighthouse. The parish occupies the north-eastern angle of land in this part of the county, and extends about three miles and a half each way. At one time the name of the parish was Philorth, and the possessions of Lord Saltoun here retain that appellation. In the middle of the 16th century a town was erected upon the estate of Sir Alexander Fraser, of Philorth, which, from the name of the proprietor or superior, was called Fraserburgh. This town is neatly built; and the streets, which are tolerably spacious, cross each other nearly at right angles. Near the centre are the prison and town-house; and the cross is an elegant structure, of modern erection. Fraserburgh possesses an excellent harbour, which will admit vessels of 300 tons; it is defended from the sea by two large piers, erected at an expense of about 20,000*l.*: from its situation it is well adapted for the reception of vessels that are wind-bound, as they can make this port when they cannot approach any other on this part of the coast. Contiguous to the harbour is a tolerable road for shipping, in a bay nearly three miles in length, and upwards of one in breadth, with good anchorage. A herring-fishery, with excellent accommodation for curing, has been established here for upwards of twenty years, and is now one of the most successful stations on the east coast of Scotland; the average number of boats employed is about 200. The principal exports are herrings and other fish, grain, potatoes, and butter; besides which there have been shipped, of late years, several cargoes of fat cattle for the London market. Lord Saltoun is hereditary provost; and he, with two bailies, a dean of guild, and seven councillors, regulate the affairs of the burgh. A weekly corn-market is held on Friday; and there are three annual fairs, viz., on the second Wednesday in March, second Thursday in June, and second Friday in September, all old style.

POST OFFICE, North Shore street, William Fraser, Post Master.—The ABERDEEN mail arrives every afternoon at two, and is despatched every morning at twenty minutes past seven.—Letters from BANFF arrive every Tuesday, Thursday and Saturday, and are

FYVIE AND METHLICK.

FYVIE, an inland parish, on the high road from Aberdeen to Banff, is eight miles from Meldrum, and 26 from Aberdeen; seated on both sides the river Ythan. Fyvie Castle, the seat of Wm. Gordon, Esq. stands in a most delightful situation; it is among the first specimens of Gothic architecture, and has been repaired and greatly improved. The scenery around is highly pleasing, and a beautiful loch intersects the grounds. Near the church, on the banks of the Ythan, are the ruins of a priory, founded, along with the parish church, in honour of the Virgin Mary, by Fergus, Earl of Buchan, in 1179, and was given to the abbey of Arbroath. The places of worship in the parish are an established church and two episcopal chapels—one of the latter at the village of Woodhead, the other at that of Meiklefolla.

METHLICK parish is bounded by Fyvie on the west, New Deer on the north and east, and Tarves also on the east, and south; it extends seven miles in length, by upwards of three in breadth. The district is intersected, throughout its extent from the north-west to the south-east, by the river Ythan, on the banks of which there now appear some thriving and decorative plantations.

POST OFFICE, FYVIE, Sarah Rose, Post Mistress.—Letters from ABERDEEN and the South, and from BANFF and the North, arrive every morning at ten, and are despatched at the same time.

GARIOCH, CLUNY, CULSALMOND, DAVIOT, INSCH,

KEMNAY, LESLIE, MONYMUSK, OYNE, PREMNAY, AND RAYNE.

GARIOCH, Chapel of Garioch, or Logie-Durno, a parish in the centre of the county, is distant from Aberdeen 20 miles, from Huntly 18, and from Inverury four. It is eight miles in length and seven in breadth; the river Don dividing it on the south from Kemnay—the water of Urie being its northern boundary. The Castle of Balquhain, now in ruins, is famed for an echo, supposed to be the finest in Scotland. In this parish was fought the battle of Harlaw, in 1411, between Alexander Earl of Marr and Donald Earl of the Isles; Buchan relates that the number of nobility who fell, in this obstinately contested action, was greater than had fallen in any foreign engagement for many years before.

KEMNAY parish, four miles and a half in length and three in breadth, is distant from Aberdeen 17 miles, and from Inverury five. The house of Kemnay is delightfully situated on the banks of the Don, and surrounded with a park and pleasure-grounds, laid out with great taste.

LESLIE, a parish in the district of Garioch, comprehends a superficies of four square miles; it is watered by the small river Gadie—a stream celebrated by Arthur Johnston, in his elegant Latin poems. In several places towards the south there is found a species of greenish coloured anianthus, which is easily cut and formed by the common people into snuff-boxes and other trinkets, which have a very beautiful appearance. Several remains of druidical temples, cairns, and an ancient encampment, are pointed out.

CLUNY parish is distant from Aberdeen 18 miles, and from Inverury 9; in length it is about ten miles, and in breadth from two to three—and it is situate between the rivers Dee and Don. There are three druidical temples, and several cairns of great size in this district, besides two large castles, Castle Cluny and Castle Fraser (erected in the beginning of the 15th century). The Castle of Cluny has still a double-barred iron gate, weighing 32 stone, with massy iron bolts: this is said to have been the birth-place of the 'Admirable Crichton.'

MONYMUSK parish is about seven miles long, and from four to five broad; and is distant from Inverury seven miles. Monymusk house, the seat of the Grant family, is an elegant building, on the right bank of the Don, environed by fine plantations. Fairs, the second Monday in January, February, March, April, and December, the last Thursday in July, and the Friday before the 22d November.

CULSALMOND parish is distant from Huntly 10 miles, and from Aberdeen 28. This is one of the most fertile parishes in the shire; having a flat surface, intersected with thriving plantations.

OYNE, a parish in the Garioch district, is of an irregular figure, stretching about six miles in length, by from two to three in breadth; it is mostly of a fertile and cheering aspect. Aberdeen is about 23 miles distant, and Huntly 15.

DAVIOT, a parish in the district of Garioch, extends about five miles in length, by four in breadth; the surface is level, and has a south-eastern exposure. It has two druidical temples, one of which forms part of the church-yard. The land is undulating, and lies low; but it is not very productive, and is but indifferently enclosed.

PREMNAY is 24 miles from Aberdeen; the parish is situate on the north side of the hill of Bennachie, and is almost four miles long by one broad.

INSCH is a burgh of barony in the before-mentioned district, 26 miles from Aberdeen; the parish extending five miles in length, by three in breadth; bounded by Culsalmond on the east, Kinnethmont on the west, and separated by the water of Urie from Drumlade and Forgue. On the top of the hill of Dun-o-deer are the ruins of an old castle, said to have been erected by King Gregory the Great. In the most elevated part of the hill of Fondland, within this parish, are extensive quarries of fine blue slate. A weekly market and four annual fairs are held in the town.

RAYNE, a parish near the centre of Aberdeenshire, lying on the left bank of the Urie, betwixt Culsalmond on the north-west, and Daviot and the Chapel of Garioch on the south-east; it extends about four and a half miles from the Urie, by a breadth of from two to four miles. Except a small eminence covered with heath on the north side of the parish, the surface is flat, with a few rising spots on the banks of the Urie. The district, on the whole, has a pleasing appearance, and is ornamented by plantations. In the central part of the parish stands the village of Rayne; and on the public road, along the Urie, is the little post-town of Old Rayne—distant 24 miles north-west from Aberdeen, and nine from Inverury. An annual fair is held on the second Tuesday in August.

WITH THE VILLAGE OF BALLATER AND PANNANICH WELLS.

GLENMUICK is a large parish in the district of Marr, formed by the union of the parishes of Glenmuick, Tulloch, and Glengairn. It lies about 40 miles west of Aberdeen; is about 18 miles in length, and 15 in breadth, intersected by the Dee and several of its tributary streams. The soil is shallow and early, producing good grain; the hills are of considerable elevation, and many of them covered with wood to the very summits. Specimens of lead ore have been found near the castle of Glengairn, and limestone is everywhere abundant.

In this parish is the agreeable and quiet village of BALLATER—greatly resorted to in the summer season by tourists, for the enjoyment of the grand and picturesque scenery around. Loch Cannor, or Kan, a lake, is in this neighbourhood: on a small island within it are the ruins of a castle, said to have been once a hunting-seat of Malcolm Canmore. The lake

HUNTLY, DRUMLADE AND GARTLY.

HUNTLY, a burgh of barony and presbytery seat, is a pleasing and modern town, and the capital of the parish of its name; 123 miles N. of Edinburgh, 66 E. of Inverness, 36 N. of Aberdeen, 21 S.W. of Banff, and 18 S.E. of Fochabers. The parish is about six miles in length and four in breadth, formed by the annexation of the parishes of Dumbenan and Kinore. The general surface is exceedingly rough and rocky, containing, however, many acres of fine arable land; and some of the eminences are covered with beautiful plantations. It is watered by the Bogie and the Deveron. St. Mungo's hill, in the district of Kinore, has the appearance of a volcano; and on the top there is an opening, which is generally filled with water—though, in dry seasons, peat is obtained from it, strongly impregnated with sulphur; and pieces of lava, it is said, have been found round it. Limestone, some of which approaches to the nature of marble, and takes a very high polish, is obtained in the parish. The town is in a dry and salubrious situation, on the point of land formed by the confluence of the Bogie with the Deveron, the stream of each being crossed by a handsome bridge; it is neatly built, having two principal streets, crossing each other at right angles, and forming a spacious square for the market-place. Near to the town, on the banks of the Deveron, is Huntly

Lodge, the elegant seat of her Grace the Duchess of Gordon; and nigh to the bridge of Deveron stands Huntly Castle, delapidated in 1594, after the battle of Glenliver: these interesting ruins display much architectural beauty, and still afford some conception of their grandeur, when occupied by the ancient and noble family of Gordon. Huntly has no magistrates, nor resident justice of the peace; his Grace the Duke of Richmond is superior, and the town is regulated by the barou baillie. A court is held on the first Monday of every month, at eleven o'clock in the forenoon.

This town was once famed for the manufacture of fine linen, introduced by an Irish manufacturer in the year 1768; and the quantity annually manufactured used to amount to 30,000l. or 40,000l.; but during and since the time of the continental war, this branch of industry has gradually decreased. It is now a place of no particular manufacture, and the trade is merely local, and confined to the immediate neighbourhood. The town appears to be rapidly declining, but derives some assistance from its being situate on the road betwixt Aberdeen and Inverness. The market is held on Thursday, and there are ten fairs in the year, viz.: the last Tuesday in February, the last Tuesday in March, Thursday after the 26th May (or the 26th, if

DRUMLADE parish extends from five to six miles in length, and from four to five in breadth. There are three tumuli, near one of which are the remains of an encampment of King Robert Bruce, after he had defeated Comyn, Earl of Buchan, near the burgh of Inverury. The soil is generally fertile, and the surface considerably variegated. Fairs are held on the second Tuesday in January and second Wednesday in May, old style; and on Saturday before the second Tuesday in October, new style.

The parish of GARTLY, partly in Aberdeenshire and partly in Banffshire, is of an irregular oval form, extending about 12 miles in length, by six in breadth. The noble family of Gordon are sole proprietors of this extensive tract. An excellent quarry of blue slate is in the parish, and the hills afford peat in the greatest abundance. INVERURY AND KINTORE.

INVERURY is a royal burgh, and the capital of the county of its name; 16 miles n.w. of Aberdeen, 22 s.w. of Huntly, and 6 w. by s. of Old Meldrum; pleasantly situate on the neck of land formed by the rival waters of the Don and Urie. Tradition reports that Inverury was erected into a royal burgh by King Robert Bruce, on the occasion of a signal victory obtained by him, in the neighbourhood, over Comyn Earl of Buchan, the King of England's general in Scotland. The oldest charter is a novodamus by Queen Mary, the preamble of which states that Inverury had been a royal burgh time immemorial, but that the charter of its erection had been lost during the civil wars. Near this place, Stuart Earl of Marr defeated Donald of the Isles, in 1418. The town is governed by three bailies, a provost & dean of guild, and joins with Kintore, Peterhead, Banff, Cullen, and Elgin in sending a member to parliament. Inverury confers the title of baron on the Earl of Kintore. By means of the patronage and influence of this nobleman, a bridge was erected over the Don in 1791, at an expense of 2,000*l.*; and subsequently another has been carried over the Urie. These improvements, together with the canal from hence to Aberdeen, have imparted a new stimulus to industry, and Inverury is now becoming a thriving town. The markets, which are for cattle and grain, are held on January 12th and 26th, February 9th and 23d, March 8th and 22d, April 12th and 27th, May 18th, June 6th, July 5th and 21st, August 18th, September 13th, October 18th, November 8th, 15th and 29th, and December 13th and 27th.

KINTORE is also a royal burgh, and capital of the parish of its name; between three and four miles s.e. from Inverury. In this parish are numerous cairns and tumuli, which are said to point out the position where Robert Bruce overtook and destroyed the army of Edward I., after the defeat of Comyn Earl of Buchan near Inverury. The town, which is small, is situate on the public road, near the Don; and the Inverury canal passes it on the west. It is governed by a provost, two bailies, a dean of guild and a treasurer, assisted by a council of eight other burghesses; and is a contributory burgh with Inverury and other places before named in returning a member to parliament.

KINCARDINE-O'NEIL, CHARLESTOWN OF ABOYNE,

BIRSE AND LUMPHANNAN.

KINCARDINE-O'NEIL is a village and the seat of a presbytery, in the parish of its name, situate on the banks of the Dee; the buildings surrounding the church. The village is seated on the public road between Aberdeen and Ballater; 26 miles from the former, 15 from the latter, and 25 from Stonehaven; commanding an extensive prospect up the river, towards the Grampian mountains; and is much resorted to for the summer retirement of invalids. The parish, which is about seven miles in length, by six in extreme breadth, is partly hilly and pastoral, and partly arable, while in some places are thriving plantations. The greater proportion of the inhabitants are occupied in agriculture, and others are employed by the manufacturers of Aberdeen in knitting worsted stockings. Fairs are held on the second Tuesday in May, and on the Wednesday and Thursday after the last Tuesday in August, old style.

CHARLESTOWN is a small town in the parish of ABOYNE, in the district of Mar; situate 30 miles west of Aberdeen, on the north bank of the Dee. The parish is united to that of Glentanar, and is watered by the Feuch, the Tanar, and the Allachy, which, during heavy rains, become impetuous streams. The forest of Glentanar is extensive, and yields some large timber; and the parish is celebrated for its goat's whey, used by persons labouring under consumption.

BIRSE, the most southern parish of Aberdeenshire, lies on the south bank of the river Dee, and forms nearly a square of ten miles. There are three districts in the parish, inclosed by the same number of ridges of hills, which take a south-westerly direction towards the Grampians from the river Dee; in the valleys formed by these ridges run three streams of water, the Feuch, the Chatie, and the Birse. The proportion of uncultivated land is very considerable, but the old system of agriculture is giving way to modern improvements. The road from Dundee to Inverness passes through this parish. Large upright stones, cairns, and other monuments of antiquity, are frequently met with, as is limestone in abundance. The parish church is distant about 27 miles from Aberdeen.

LUMPHANNAN parish, about six miles in length and four in breadth, is nearly surrounded by hills. The name signifies 'the bare little valley'; but this designation is not, in the present day, applicable to the low lands, which are now well cultivated and fruitful.

NEW DEER parish is situate almost in the centre of the district of Buchan; extending 14 miles from north to south, and about seven in breadth. The church, a neat edifice, and the village, which is tolerably well built, lie about 30 miles north from Aberdeen. About two miles from the church stands an old castle, called Feddoratt, which appears to have been a place of considerable strength. There are a few remains of druidical temples; and several tumuli have been opened, and found to contain urns inclosed in stone coffins. Three miles from New Deer is Brucklay Castle, built in the year 1540, the seat of John Dingwall, Esq.: the situation of the castle is most romantic, and the scenery is delightful; the lawns are tastefully laid out, and the park is beautified and enriched by the waters of the Ugie. AND UDNEY.

NEW MACHAR, a parish in the district of Buchan, situate chiefly in Aberdeenshire, but partly in the county of Banff, extends nine miles in length, by two and a half in breadth; the parish kirk is about 11 miles from Aberdeen. The country is generally rather flat, and the soil is mostly arable, with several patches of wet mossy land; while in the southern quarter are some fine plantations. There is a small lake, near the boundary with Old Machar, called Bishop's Loch, in which is an island, whereon stand the ruins of a castle once belonging to the bishops of Aberdeen.

CRAIG DAM, in the neighbourhood of Tarves, has a neat chapel of the united secession, and a free-school endowed by a Mr. Peter Barron, of Harpley, in the county of Norfolk. The river Ythan passes through this district, watering a soil various in quality, but mostly fertile.

DYCE parish is of considerable extent, lying on the south bank of the Don, which river separates it from Fintray, and Newhills parish divides it from Old Aberdeen. The Tyre-begar ridge runs through the district from south to north; one of the loftiest hills is surmounted by a druidical temple. The parish kirk is about six miles from Aberdeen, and about three and a half from New Machar.

FINTRAY parish is five miles in length, by from three to four in breadth. On the banks of the Don the land is fertile, and susceptible of profitable cultivation; but other parts are hilly. An abbey formerly existed in this parish—the Rev. J. Leslie, minister, possesses a stone inscribed with the date 1386—supposed to have formed a fraction of the building, and a silver cup, dated 1633, which tradition records to

OLD DEER, LONGSIDE AND MINTLAW.

OLD DEER is a parish, in Buchan district, ten miles in length, by a mean breadth of between five and six; the village being 10½ miles west from Peterhead, and 31 north of Aberdeen by the Mintlaw road. One branch of the river Ugie passes through the centre of the parish, and the other branch enters it for a short course on the north-east. The manufacturing and bleaching of fine linen is a source of employment to many families, and there are several mills of different descriptions within the parish. The abbey of Deer, which stands about a mile from the village, was built in the beginning of the 13th century by William Comyn, Earl of Buchan; it is mostly in ruins, but there is still enough remaining to show what it originally was. There were at one time no less than twelve druidical temples, of which four, tolerably entire, are yet remaining; the druids' temple at Buffie is the most conspicuous, and is an object of great attraction for the antiquarian and traveller. The pleasure-grounds and woods of Pitfour will at once arrest the admiration of strangers. A fair is held at Aiky-Brae on the second Tuesday in July, and Dunstan fair is kept on the second Tuesday in December, both old style.

LONGSIDE, a parish also in Buchan, contains the village of its name, which latter is about 30 miles north of Aberdeen, six west of Peterhead, and four from Old Deer. A handsome church, recently erected here, was opened for divine service, for the first time, on the 7th of August, 1836; an episcopal chapel and a parochial school are also in the village. The village of MINTLAW, in this parish, is three miles from Longside, on the road leading to Aberdeen and Fraserburgh.

OLD MELDRUM, BOURTIE AND TARVES.

OLD MELDRUM is a market town and burgh of barony, in the parish of its name; pleasantly situate on the road from Aberdeen to Banff; 18 miles N.W. of the former, 27 from the latter, and five from Inverury. The houses are generally well built, but the streets are irregular. The principal building is the town-hall, a handsome edifice, with a neat spire. Meldrum was constituted a burgh of barony in the year 1672, under the jurisdiction of two bailies; B. C. Urquhart, Esq. is superior of the burgh. The seat of this gentleman (Meldrum House) is romantically situated, and, from its antique style of architecture, possesses a striking effect; and, being surrounded with fine scenery, presents to the eye the tout ensemble of a most delightful residence. The manufacture of cotton goods is carried on here by two establishments; there is also a brewery and a distillery, and in the neighbourhood are corn-mills. The extent of the parish is about five miles from north to south, by a breadth of from two to four miles. The district is partly arable and partly pastoral; the soil of the southern portion is fertile,

IS a considerable seaport town, a burgh of barony, and the capital of the parish of its name, in the district of Buchan; 141 miles N. by W. of Edinburgh, 34 S.E. of Banff, 32 N.E. of Aberdeen, and 18 S.S.E. of Fraserburgh. It is situate upon a peninsula (the most easterly point of Scotland), about a mile south of the mouth of the river Ugie—the isthmus between the peninsula and the main land being only eight hundred yards wide. The town is built in the form of a cross, and is divided into four districts, called the Kirktown, Ronheads, Keith-Inch, and Peterhead Proper. The houses, which are built of granite (so abundant in various parts of the county), are all of them neat, and many of them commodious and elegant. The town is now lighted with gas; and a plentiful supply of excellent spring water has lately been brought, at a great expense, for the use of the inhabitants and the shipping. The wells of Peterhead have long been resorted to; the waters are chalybeate, deemed efficacious in debility of the stomach and disorders in the bowels, and have been in repute upwards of two centuries; the strongest is called the 'wine well,' from the water sparkling in the glass, like Champagne; it lies to the south of the town. There are also very superior hot and cold baths, which were formerly much frequented: as the beach also affords excellent opportunities and conveniences for sea-bathing, Peterhead, during the summer season, is a very cheerful place. Fossil shells in great quantities, and of various kinds, are found in the neighbourhood, 20 or 30 feet above the level of the sea—and these of kinds not to be met with in an original state; many curious pebbles, also, may be picked up on the shore. A public building which claims particular attention is the town-house, at the head of the principal street: it is an elegant edifice, sixty feet long, forty-nine feet wide, with a spire one hundred and ten feet high, and a fine clock; the town-hall, one of the apartments, is a spacious elegant room; and one of equal dimensions is handsomely fitted up as a court-room, in which the baillie court hold their sittings. Peterhead was founded and erected into a burgh of barony by George Earl Marischal, in the year 1593; but in 1715 it was forfeited by this family, in consequence of their adherence to the unfortunate house of Stuart, and purchased, with the neighbouring lands, in 1738, by the trustees or governors of the merchant maiden hospital, Edinburgh, who are still the superiors. The nomination of the magistrates was, by charter, vested in them and the magistrates and councillors, the latter of whom were formerly elected by a majority of the feuars; but since the elective franchise was conferred upon the burgh, the magistrates and councillors are elected by the 107 voters; and the town now enjoys the privileges of a royal burgh: in conjunction with Kintore, Elgin, Cullen, Banff and Inverury, it returns one member to parliament.

As a commercial town, Peterhead has made rapid advances, and now ranks pretty high. At an early period its vessels traded to the ports in the Baltic, to the Levant, and to America; and in 1795 its merchants could fit out 28 vessels, carrying upwards of 3,000 tons. There are now 90 ships belonging to the port, the registered tonnage of which amounts to about 13,000. There are two harbours: the south harbour, comprising about six acres, having 12 to 14 feet water at medium springs, and 8 to 10 feet at neap tides; and the north harbour, extending to about 11 acres, having at spring tides 18 feet water, and never under 14 feet on any tide: they are divided from each other only by a very narrow isthmus, which forms a communication between the Keith-Inch and the other parts of the town. The management is placed by act of parliament under a board of trustees, who have in contemplation, at no distant period, the formation of a junction-cut between the two harbours, which will add very materially to their utility and importance. Protected as these harbours are, and projecting into the German ocean—having two spacious bays, with good anchorage—they are at once safe and commodious. The revenue accruing from the commerce of this place amounted, in 1835, to 2,700*l.*; while in the year 1800 it was only 100*l.* Until a recent period little attention was paid to the fisheries, which have of late years been carried on successfully. In whale fishing it now ranks the second port in the island. It has likewise become a most extensive and important station for the herring fishery, having attained the second rank in that branch of maritime industry: there are at this time (1836) 262 boats belonging to this rendezvous, and the quantity of herrings caught in the season exceeded 40,000 barrels. Owing to the liberal encouragement given, both by the superiors of the town and the trustees of the harbours, this fishery must go on rapidly increasing; and Peterhead may, in a few years, be reasonably expected to stand inferior to none as a fishing station. The lighthouse erected on the Buchan Ness, a well-known promontory, at the extremity of the south bay, is of the first importance, both as regards the interests of the general trade of the port and that of the division to which we have more particularly adverted. Exclusive of the facilities which the granite quarries in the neighbourhood present for local purposes, they supply no inconsiderable item in the amount of exports: between the years 1817 and 1822, inclusive, 35,112 tons of this stone were shipped at Peterhead, chiefly in large blocks for the docks at London; and since that period the exportation annually continues. The quantity of grain embarked last year from this port was 28,821 quarters, exclusive of 2,640 sacks of meal. Besides these, the exports of herrings, cod, pork, cheese, eggs, butter, oil, &c. have been considerable and progressive.

The established church, situate at the conjunction of the south and west roads, combines elegance with convenience, and has a fine spire; and the episcopal chapel is a handsome modern edifice, in the design of which the architect has displayed superior taste. The other places of worship are, the East church, or chapel of ease under the establishment; one for the congregationalists; a united secession chapel, and one for the methodists. There has been lately established an association for the promotion of science, literature and the arts, which, from its popular nature and the support already yielded, promises to be of great utility and importance; it has now above 170 members, by whom essays and dissertations are periodically delivered; and the services of able popular lecturers are occasionally engaged, to deliver courses on scientific subjects. A museum forms part of the objects of this society, which, already exhibits a great variety of specimens collected from the different kingdoms of nature.

The market is held on Friday; and there are two annual fairs, viz., on the third Tuesday in May, and the second Tuesday in November, both old style.

POST OFFICE, Broad street, Thomas Knox, Post Master.—The South mail (via ABERDEEN) arrives every morning at half-past twelve, and is despatched every morning at nine.—The BANFF and Western mail arrives every evening at eight, and is despatched every morning at eight.—The LERWICK mail is despatched, by sailing packet, once a week.

PITSLIGO AND ROSEHEARTY.

PITSLIGO is a parish in the district of Buchan, lying on the sea-coast, betwixt Aberdeen on the west and Fraserburgh on the east; and commencing about two miles west of Kinnaird Head. The land is generally fertile, and the face of the country level. Pitsligo Castle, formerly the seat of the Lords Pitsligo (a title in the Forbes family), is an ancient structure, surrounded with extensive gardens. The labouring portion of the population are principally employed in fishing, and others in agriculture.

ROSEHEARTY, erected into a burgh of barony by Charles II., is a maritime village in the parish of Pitsligo, four miles west from Fraserburgh, and 18 east from Banff. It has a good harbour, capable of admitting vessels of from 80 to 100 tons. The chief imports are timber, coals, and salt, and it exports fish and grain; its commerce, however, is very inconsiderable. There is another small fishing-village in Pitsligo parish, called PITALLY, situate between Kinnaird Head and Roseheart Point.

RHYNIE AND ESSIE, AUCHINDOIR AND KEARN,

WITH LUMSDEN, CABRACH, CLATT AND KENETHMONT.

RHYNIE AND ESSIE, a united parish in the district of Strathbogie, is distant from Huntly 10 miles; it comprehends a superficies of thirty square miles; bounded on the north by the barony of Gartly, on the south by Auchindoir, and on the west by Cabrach. The soil is rich and fertile on the banks of the Bogie; towards the hills it is light and gravelly, yet productive. The only antiquity in this parish, deserving of notice, is a vitrified fort on the top of the hill of Noth. There are two springs in the neighbourhood of Rhyynie, remarkable for the surprising quantity of water they discharge, each being capable of turning a mill at its source. Fairs are held on the Tuesday before the second Wednesday in June, new style; and on the first Thurs. in Sept. and second Wed. in Oct. old style.

AUCHINDOIR, a parish with which KEARN has been incorporated, is about seven miles long and five broad, distant from Huntly twelve miles. A bluish-coloured fibrous asbestos is found in great quantities in the fissures of the rocks, which the sportsmen frequently use for wadding to their fowling-pieces. The parish also abounds with freestone. The only river of note is the Bogie. In this parish is a small village, called LUMSDEN, erected within the last twelve years, and named

CABRACH parish is partly in the county of Aberdeen, and partly in that of Banff; extending in length five miles, by about three in breadth; distant from Aberdeen 45 miles, and from Huntly 20. The Deveron and the Fiddich water this parish. The mountains abound with game.

CLATT, a small village and parish in Aberdeenshire, is distant from Aberdeen 33 miles, and from Huntly 10. It was elevated into a burgh of barony by James VI., in 1501, with power to hold weekly and annual markets. The superiority belongs to the family of Gordon, of Knoekespock, who have evinced a laudable anxiety for the improvement of the place. A fair is held on the third Wednesday in November.

KENETHMONT parish, distant from Huntly 8 miles, and from Aberdeen 33, extends about six miles in length, and three in breadth. It is watered by several rivulets, and the soil is in most parts productive.

STRICHEN, ABERDOUR, TYRIE AND NEW PITSLIGO.

STRICHEN, or Strachen, is a neat village, in the parish of its name; distant from Aberdeen 33½ miles, Banff 20, Turriff 16, Peterhead 15, and Fraserburgh 9. The town-house is a convenient and elegant structure, erected in the year 1816, by T. A. Fraser, Esq., at the expense of 2,000*l*. The seat of this gentleman, Strichen House, is most desirably situated. The side of one of the hills in this parish is of white stone, in which is cut the figure of a horse, which has a singular effect at a distance. Upon the same hill is a hunter's lodge, on which is inscribed, 'This hunter's lodge Robb Gib commands.' Fairs are held on the first Tuesday of January, last Tuesday of February, second Tuesday and Wednesday of May, first Tuesday and Wednesday of July, second Tuesday and Wednesday of August, and first Tuesday and Wednesday of November, old style.

ABERDOUR parish stretches along the Moray Frith about 10 miles. The shore here is so bold and precipitous, that there are only three places where boats can effect a landing; and the rocks have been excavated by the sea into innumerable caves, one of which

TARLAND AND MIGVIE, AND LEOCHEL AND CUSHNIE.

TARLAND AND MIGVIE, united parishes, form a very irregular and disjointed district on the western borders of Aberdeenshire. The village of Tarland, which is a burgh of barony, is situate nearly in the centre of the district of Cromar. The lands about the village are mostly level, but the greater proportion of the parish is mountainous, and the seasons are cold; the woods which have of late been planted will, however, be the means of materially ameliorating the latter inconvenience. A small rivulet runs by the village and falls into the river Dee, near Charlestown of Aboyne; and a disjointed part of the united parish is watered by the Don. Fairs are held on the last Wednesday in February, Wednesday before the 26th

LEOCHEL AND CUSHNIE are united in one parish, and contain two ancient castles, now in ruins, called Linturk and Corse; in the latter were born several of the Forbes', one of whom (Patrick Forbes, of Corse,) wrote a commentary on the Revelations. Cragievar, the elegant seat of Sir John Forbes, is also in this parish, and from its elevated situation commands an extensive prospect of the country around. Fairs take place annually on the second Tuesday in March, and the first Friday in November, old style.

TURRIFF AND KING EDWARD,

WITH THE VILLAGE OF NEW BYTH.

TURRIFF is a free burgh of barony, the seat of a presbytery, and the capital of the parish of its name;
 34½ miles N.N.W. of Aberdeen, 17 N.N.W. of Meldrum, &
 11 S.E. of Banff; situate on a tributary stream of the Deveron, near that river. Its charter, dated the 10th of March, 1511, was granted by King James IV. in favour of Mr. Thos. Dickson, prebend of Turriff: by this the inhabitants were entitled to hold a weekly
 market on the sabbath day, and three fairs annually, each to continue eight days. The principal manufactures of Turriff are linen yarn and brown linens; the works of Messrs. John Adam and Co. employ many hands. A bleachfield, capable of doing considerable business, a branch of the Commercial Bank of Scotland, and two respectable inns are also in the town.
 The fairs are now held on the last Tuesday in the months of January, March, May and July, and the first Tuesday in December; in addition to which, eleven moveable large markets take place every year.

KING EDWARD, properly Ken-Edar, a parish in the northern part of the county, is twelve miles in length from east to west, by from two to five in breadth; its western extremity being washed by the Deveron—on the north it is bounded by Gamrie, on the E. by Fyvie, and on the south by Montquhitter and Turriff. The general surface is hilly and heathy, and not more than half the soil is arable; there are, however, extensive plantations, and the district is progressively improving. A streamlet, tributary to the Deveron, pursues a westerly direction through the parish; on its right bank stands the ruin of the ancient castle of Ken-Edar, once the seat of the potent Earl of Buchan. Within the south-eastern border is situate NEW BYTH, a village formed in the course of the last century.

ARGYLESHIRE,

OR, as it is frequently written, Argyllshire, is a large county in the south-western extremity of the Highlands. What may be termed the continental part is bounded on the north by Invernessshire; on the east by that county, by Perthshire and Dumbartonshire; and on the south and west by bays and straits of the Atlantic ocean. Its extreme length is 115 miles; its breadth averaging about 33; and it has not less than 600 miles of coast washed by the sea. The mainland, including the peninsula of Kintyre, has been computed to contain 2,735 square miles; while the islands connected with it are supposed to comprise 1,063 more: whereby the whole extent of land in Argyleshire may be estimated at 3,800 square miles. The county is divided into six principal districts—ARGYLE PROPER, COWAL, ISLAY, KINTYRE, LORN, and MULL. Cowal is divided from Dumbartonshire by Loch Long, and bounded by Loch Fyne on the west; betwixt Loch Fyne and Loch Linnhe, and stretching away to the north, is Lorn; from which, on its south-west quarter, there extends, in a southerly direction into the Irish sea, the peninsula of Kintyre. The islands of Mull, Jura, and Islay, are divided from the continent, or from each other, merely by narrow sounds; and may be taken from their proximity and accessibility, as little else than portions of the mainland, surrounded by salt-water rivers. There are other districts of inferior size within the principal ones—as Ardnamurchan, the most westerly point of Sunart; Appin, a piece of Lorn bordering on Loch Linnhe; Glenorchy, another portion of Lorn on its eastern side; and Knapdale, occupying a position between Kintyre and Nether Lorn.

This county, together with that of Perth, is presumed to have constituted the ancient Caledonian kingdom, while the Romans and Picts were in possession of the greater part of Scotland. In former ages the western coast of Argyleshire was perpetually exposed to the descents and depredations of the Danes and the Irish, but the original inhabitants never suffered them to penetrate any considerable distance into the interior: if an enemy landed, or was seen hovering on the coast, in the course of a few hours the whole country was alarmed, and the men repaired to the shore completely armed. The heroes celebrated by Ossian were a militia, established in Argyleshire, for the purpose of defending the country in any sudden emergency. Of old the chieftain was considered the father, rather than the master of his clan; his followers loved him with a degree of enthusiasm, which made them cheerfully undergo any fatigue or danger; and it was his interest, as well as his pride and glory, to requite so animated an adherence to the utmost of his power. The rent paid him was chiefly consumed in feasts given at the habitations of his tenants; on these occasions they all lived together as friends, and the departure of the chief always occasioned regret. The cattle and corn, formerly consumed at these feasts of hospitality, were, in more polished times, required to be brought to the landlord's mansion, and thus friendship degenerated into oppression. Campbell of Auchinbreck had anciently a right to carry off the best cow he could find, upon several properties, each Martinmas, by way of mart—the island of Islay paid 500 such cows yearly: but this badge of slavery has been converted into a modus of twenty shillings a head. The inconveniences attending this state, arose from the petty quarrels between neighbouring clans, excited by a spirit of plunder, and absurd points of fantastical honour. At this period the Scottish kings had no authority over this part of the country; the M'Donalds of the Isles assuming royal powers, holding parliaments, and enacting laws, until the Bruces brought the disorderly clans into some kind of subordination. From this time, in their different wars with the English, the chiefs had recourse to the assistance of the Highlanders, with whom, and the inhabitants of the low country, they contracted debts, rendering the condition of the middle classes worse, as the chiefs found it necessary to require an addition to their yearly revenue, and, in order to enforce obedience, reference was had to penal laws. In this respect the king was obliged to gratify his feudal barons; for they were always formidable to his throne. But when the laws presented any obstacle to their rapacious exactions, they openly set them at defiance: they erected gibbets, and hanged their tenants without trial or mercy. The evil became at last so flagrant, that a jury, and bailiff or sheriff, were introduced; but this measure did not remove the mischief; for the law-officer was not unfrequently bribed to spare a real culprit, while the poorer, and more innocent, were considered fit subjects for the gallows. In 1748 these abominable jurisdictions were totally abolished; and no sooner were men emancipated from their fetters, than they began to improve their properties; and since that time, the face and condition of this country has undergone the happiest change. The ancient inhabitants of the Highlands of Argyleshire prided themselves on their endurance of hunger and fatigue; they were passionately fond of music and poetry; and the song and the dance soon made them forget their toils. Now the sound of the bagpipe is more rarely heard; the taste for poetry has disappeared; the deer have abandoned the mountains, and extensive forests are either converted into sheep-walks, or have succumbed to modern cultivation.

SOIL, PRODUCE, CLIMATE, &c.—The surface of this county is, like most other parts of the Highlands, mountainous, bleak, and uncomfortable to the view; hills, rocks, and huge mountains, rise upon each other in stupendous and fearful disorder. Glencoe is, perhaps, amongst the most awfully picturesque valleys that can be contemplated. The coast is rocky, but indented with navigable bays, and islets, which afford good harbours for shipping. The vales and flat parts are cultivated; the mountains feed great quantities of sheep and black cattle; the woods, of which there are still some, afford shelter to deer, and other game, while much wealth is got in the bowels of the mountains, which contain mines of lead, copper, &c., with extensive quarries of slate; of the latter, the most considerable, perhaps, are wrought in Appin district, at Easdale; in Seil Island; the Island of Islay, &c. In the beginning of the eighteenth century, much of the natural wood was cut up and sold by the proprietors, at prices by no means proportionate to the injury perpetrated upon the face of the country; despoiling it of one of its most interesting features, finding, in the introduction of modern plantations, but a meagre substitute for the noble forest-tree. The county, altogether, abounds more in romantic scenes than fertile plains and wood-clad hills. Out of an area of 1,367,500 acres in the county, little more than 100,000 are cultivated, the remainder consisting of hill and dale, pasture, wood, fresh and salt water lakes, rivers, &c. The MANUFACTURERS of Argyleshire are yet in so feeble

a state as to be scarcely worthy of notice. The principal article made on a large scale for exportation is whisky, which is of a remarkable fine quality; there are distilleries in several parts of the county, for which Glasgow is the depôt. From the peculiar form of Argyleshire, it will always owe as much of the benefit arising from a ready communication between its near and distant ports, to improvements in water carriage, as to any extension of that by land. By the admirable spirit of the city of Glasgow, a very considerable number of steam vessels are now constantly employed in conveying passengers and goods to and fro throughout the country, and in transporting the country produce to market at that city. There is not, at the present day, a bay, loch, or inlet, but holds a daily or commands a weekly communication with the Lowlands, and the several districts of the country. By this means the farmers are encouraged to fatten stock which they would never otherwise think of fattening. Steam boats are, in short, the lively causes of every kind of improvement in this county. In agriculture changes are yearly witnessed in the different districts, from the modern improvements in husbandry; and several spirited proprietors are doing much towards improving the waste lands upon their estates, and in enclosing and planting. This county is well watered by rivers, brooks and lochs, which abound with fish. Loch Fyne is celebrated as furnishing the best herrings of any found on the coast of Scotland, and it is estimated, that there are caught, in this arm of the sea, from twenty to thirty thousand barrels annually. Loch Aw (pronounced Loch O), is a beautiful fresh water lake, about 28 miles long and from one to two broad, reckoned the most picturesque lake of any in the Highlands, and possesses many lovely woody islets, among which are seen the ruins of several old castles; its waters, which abound with salmon, trout, and eel, discharge themselves into Loch Etive, a branch of the Atlantic ocean, at Bunaw Ferry. The climate of the lower parts of Argyleshire is mild and temperate, but in the upper inland districts, the atmosphere is severe. On the tops of many of the hills the snow often lies for months, chilling the air, and giving the country a cheerless wintry aspect, even in tolerably mild opening weather. In the sinuosities of the valleys the air is of a more bland nature, these places being protected from the north and south-west winds, and having generally a southerly exposure. The central districts are more subject to rains than the coast, from the proximity of high hills, whose summits attract and break the clouds from the Atlantic.

This extensive county is divided, ecclesiastically, into not more than fifty parishes, which contain only two Royal Burghs, INVERARY, at the head of Loch Fyne, and CAMPBELTOWN, in Kintyre, the former of which is a station of the circuit court of justiciary. One member is returned to parliament for the county; the contributory burghs (or those which, in conjunction with others, are represented in the senate) belonging to this county, are CAMPBELTOWN, INVERARY and OBAN. The Duke of Argyle is the proprietor of a large portion of the shire; and he is the chief of the family of Campbell, a surname which is found over the whole region, among high and low. The lordship of Campbell was elevated to the earldom of Argyle in 1457 by James III.; to a marquise in 1641 by Charles I.; and to a dukedom in 1701 by William III.

The most considerable elevations in this county are, Beininturk, 2,170; Sliagaol, 2,228; Benaeton, 2,306; Scur Choinick, 2,364; Beinima, 2,389; Creach Bein, 2,439; Paps of Jura, 2,476; Bennahna, 2,515; Buchael Etive, 2,537; Benreisipoll, 2,661; Benanambran, 2,720; Scur Dhonul, 2,730; Bein-more, 2,980; Cruachlassa, 3,000, and Cruachan, 3,390.

APPIN, BALACHELISH, SOUTH,

WITH THE ISLAND OF LISMORE, AND THEIR VICINITIES.

APPIN, or, as it is more generally called, PORT APPIN, is a small village in the united parish of Lismore and Appin, and comprised in a district of the latter appellation; situate on the point of a small promontory, on the eastern shore of Loch Linnhe; 13 miles N. of Oban, 15 N.W. of Bonawe, 35 N.W. of Inverary, 136 N.W. of Edinburgh, and 29 S.S.W. of Fort William. The parish is of great extent, chiefly occupied as grazing farms; but the village contains few houses, and is a mile and a half off the main road. About half a mile south is Airds, the seat of Sir John Campbell, Bart., of Ardnamurchan; and three miles north is Appin House, the seat of R. Downie, Esq. of Appin, whose mansions are surrounded by some of the finest timber on this coast. The church is nearly two miles north of the village, and there is a parliamentary church at nine miles distant, in the same direction, on the way to Balachelish South. On a small island near Portnacross, full two miles north, is the ancient and partly dilapidated castle of Stalker; it is nearly square, of considerable height, and evidently has been a place of some strength; and though its area is not extensive, it occupies almost a moiety of the little islet on which it stands. About half a mile from Stalker castle, on the island of Shuna, are the still more ruinous remains of another fortress of this description. A fair was formerly held at Port Appin on the Friday before Martinmas, but it now possesses trifling attraction; there is another and a well-attended fair, however, for black cattle, held at Sheanferry, nearly three miles to the south, on the Friday before the last Wednesday in the months of May and October; but as the latter fair fall on the same day as that of Oban, it will probably be altered ere long.

BALACHELISH SOUTH is a straggling but populous village, on the south shore of Loch Leven; about three miles E. of Balachelish Ferry (in the same parish), and 14 N. of Port Appin. Near the village, at the foot of the Glencoe hills, are the extensive slate quarries of the Messrs. Stuart (wrought by the proprietor, Charles Stuart, Esq. of Balachelish, in partnership with his brother Henry and their father, Capt. Dugald Stuart, who export annually about 10,000 tons of this article, to all parts of Scotland and the north of England; it is a blue slate and of a quality equal to any produced in Britain; there is a convenient quay for its shipment, and in connexion with the works these gentlemen generally employ 300 men. Within a mile of the quarries, westward, is an episcopalian chapel; and a small one for Roman catholics, erected in 1836, stands at a short distance from the village. About a mile above the quarries, on the margin of Loch Leven, near the opening of a glen superlatively wild and romantic, and almost embosomed by trees, is the residence of Ewen Macdonald, Esq., of Glencoe; and opposite, on the north shore of the loch (which here is fully a mile broad), in the county of Inverness, is Callart, the newly-erected mansion of Sir Duncan Cameron, Bart., of Fassfern and Callart, contributing in an eminent degree to the completion of the beauty of the landscape. At Balachelish South ferry is a very comfortable inn and posting-house; and in the immediate vicinity, at the entrance of a sequestered valley, is Balachelish House, the residence of the Messrs. Stuart; westward three miles from which is Ardsheal, the seat of Capt. Robert Stuart.

LISMORE is an island in Loch Linnhe, twelve miles in length by about two in breadth; it is situate between Appin and Morven, and belongs to the same united parish with the former place. Great quantities of excellent lime, as well as oats and potatoes, are exported from hence. There is a small village on this isolated fertile spot, called PORT RAMSEY; and at the southern point, on a ridge of rocks projecting some distance into the channel, stands a lighthouse, almost in a direct line between Oban and the sound of Mull; the light is on a high round pillar of stone masonry, and is an excellent and most useful beacon. On this island are also a church, the remains of Duone or Auchindoune castle, and the ruins of a Danish fort.

BONAWE AND NEIGHBOURHOOD.

BONAWE is a small scattered village, on the river Awe; 122 miles n.w. of Edinburgh, 80 n.w. of Glasgow, 12 E. of Oban, and 20 N. of Inverary by Port Sonachan ferry—but round the head of Loch Awe by Dalmailly, avoiding the ferry, it is 30 miles. The Lorn Furnace Company have an establishment here for making pig iron: the ore is of a peculiar kind, imported by the company from the district of Furness, in Lancashire; and is smelted entirely with charcoal, made in the neighbourhood from the timber produced on a large tract of country held by the company on a long lease: it is said to be the only furnace in Scotland heated solely by charcoal, and the iron is considered equal to any smelted in the kingdom. The company employ about 300 men in connexion with their works. Bonawe is also much celebrated for its salmon fishery, which affords employment to a considerable number of people in the fishing season; large quantities of the fish are sent fresh, in boxes, to Glasgow, and other parts of Scotland—as well as pickled, sealed in jars, and kits or firkins, for the London market. The church, which was erected in 1827-8, stands about half a mile above the iron-furnace, near the road to Inverary, where is also the parish school, the funds for building both having been supplied by the munificence of General D. Campbell, of Lochmell. Near the church is the Taynuilt Inn, a comfortable and convenient house, between Inverary and Oban; and at Ardochattan, about four miles n.w. on the opposite side of Loch Etive, stand the remains of an ancient priory of the benedictines; the venerable mansion of Robert Campbell, Esq., of Ardochattan, is situated on a part of the site of the priory, and the property has been in uninterrupted possession of his family since they received it from James VI. A new church was completed at Ardochattan in 1836, containing about 400 sittings, at an expense to the heirs of about 1,000*l*. The objects that most forcibly strike the attention here are Loch Etive and Ben Cruachan: the latter, with his broad shoulders, rearing his blunt-pointed summit nearly 3,400 feet above the salt water that laves his foot. It is about five miles from the Taynuilt Inn to the top of this stupendous eminence; and, although the journey is somewhat fatiguing, the view obtained from the aerial height will amply reward the tourist for the trouble of ascending.

CAMPBELTOWN,

WITH SALT-PANS, SADDLE AND NEIGHBOURHOODS.

CAMPBELTOWN is a royal burgh and sea port, 144 miles w. by s. of Edinburgh, and 100 s.w. of Glasgow, by sea, but by land the distance to either city is greater by 36 miles; 73 s.w. of Inverary, 37 s. of Tarbert, and 10 N. of Southend; beautifully situate on a fine bay or inlet of the sea. It is a place of great antiquity; Fergus, the first King of Scotland, having fixed his residence here in the beginning of the fifth century, and it continued the seat of his successors till 843; it was then called Dalruadhain, and a place on the north side of the present town is still known by that name, now written Dalaruan; but the appellation formerly applied to the site of modern Campbeltown was Ceann-Loch (i. e. the 'head of the loch'), by which name the country people still designate the town in Gaelic; the present name was given it in honour of the Duke of Argyle, when it was made a royal burgh, in 1701. It is sheltered on the north and south sides by lofty mountains, and has one of the safest harbours in the Western Highlands, possessing a depth of from three to fifteen fathoms at low water. The haven is spacious, being nearly two miles in length by one in breadth, and protected at its mouth by the isle of Devar, which is joined to the main land on the south side by a bar of sand, visible at low water, nearly half a mile long—the entrance to the bay being from the north. There is a small lighthouse, with a brilliant light, on the south eastern shore, opposite to the entrance, erected in 1821, and supported by the town; but a similar protection is much wanted on the isle of Devar. On opening into the bay, the stranger's attention is arrested by the grand though wild scenery, particularly on the south side; and the prospect immediately comprises the neat local capital, Campbeltown, situate at the head of Loch Kilkerran: the public buildings are seen towering above the private structures—beyond which the eye is carried for some distance over a fine, fertile, yet mountainous country. From the shore two quays project into the bay, so as to allow vessels to load and unload at low water: the principal one, appropriated to the convenience of steam boats and heavy vessels, was much improved in 1836, and is almost on a line with the Main-street; the other stretches from Shore-street; and there is a third quay on the opposite side of the loch, adjoining that part of the town called Dalintober. Campbeltown formerly derived great advantage from the herring fishery, for which it was particularly famed; but since the withdrawal of the bounty it has almost gone to decay, few vessels being now engaged in the trade.

The staple business at present may be said to be the distilling of whisky, in which no fewer than twenty-seven respectable firms are engaged, producing an article inferior perhaps to none of its kind in the kingdom, chiefly for the Glasgow and English markets. Next in consequence, and entirely dependent on distilling, is malting. Agriculture of late years has risen into great importance, vast quantities of potatoes being annually exported from this port to Dublin and other parts of Ireland, as well as to Liverpool, &c.; barley, also, for the various distilleries, is grown in the immediate neighbourhood. Some of the finest and richest land in this part of Scotland lies to the north and west of the town, and is chiefly the property of the Duke of Argyle, and D. S. Galbraith and George Macneal, Esqrs. Two small woollen manufactories, a colliery, tannery, rope walks, &c. add to the importance of the town; and its neighbourhood abounds with lime, stone, &c. for building and other purposes. Few towns of the size of Campbeltown possess equal commercial advantages: there are a custom-house, an extensive excise establishment, and branches of the Commercial Bank of Scotland and the Renfrewshire Banking Company. Steam vessels sail regularly to Glasgow, Greenock, and Islay, and occasionally to the adjacent coast towns, and to Londonderry, &c. in Ireland; and numerous coasting vessels are freighted to Liverpool, and other more distant parts of the empire, as well as North America, &c. The principal exports are whisky, potatoes, wool, herrings, live stock, salt, iron, &c.; and the imports are timber, grain, yeast, groceries, ironmongery, &c. The most remarkable piece of antiquity is an ancient cross, erected in the middle of the main street; its foliage is very fine and distinct. The inscription is in the Saxon character, and the following is a literal copy, with the translation annexed. Hec: est: crux: Domini: YVARI: M: H: EACHYRNA: quondam: Rectoris: de KYREGAN: et: Domini: ANDRE: nati: ejus: Rectoris: de KIL: COMAN: qui hanc cruce[m] fieri faciebat: 'This is the cross of Mr. Edward M. H. Eachran, once Rector of Kyregan, and Master Andrew his son, Rector of Kilcoman, who erected this cross.' There is, however, no date, but it is said to have been executed about the 12th century, and to have been brought from the Isle of Iona. The town-house or gaol is ornamented with a handsome spire, containing a good clock; the building also contains a council-chamber, a sheriff's hall, and an assembly-room. The town is brilliantly lighted with gas by a spirited company, formed in 1830; and the inhabitants are well supplied with water, from Cross-hill, close to the westward of the town, which is conducted into the principal streets by pipes. The municipal government is vested in a provost, two bailies, a dean of guild, and twelve common-councilmen, and, combined with Ayr, Inverary, Irvine, and Oban, sends one member to parliament.

PLACES OF WORSHIP, SCHOOLS, &c.—The Castle church, so called from its occupying the site of the ancient royal castle, was erected in 1781. The Gaelic church, so named from the language in which the service is performed, was erected in 1807, to which a beautiful stone spire was added in 1835. The Relief church was erected in 1767, and is ornamented with a handsome and substantial stone tower, in the gothic style, which was built in 1834. The secession church was erected in the same year. The Roman catholics have a small chapel, and there are places of worship for independents, Wesleyan methodists, and baptists. The burgh and parochial school is an extensive and very useful institution, supported by the corporation and the heritors in the parish; the society for propagating christian knowledge have a school in the town, and another about five miles north; and there is also a school of industry for girls.

South of the town is the high mountain called Ben-goelion, from which there is an extensive view of the neighbouring country, including the distant objects of Arran and Pladda islands, Cowall hills, the bay and heads of Ayr, the Lowlands as far as Loch Ryan, the Craig of Ailsa, Black Head at the entrance of Belfast Lough, Dounavertie, Sanda Isles, part of the Irish coast near the points of Garronhead, Red Bay and Fair Head, the dangerous bay of Macrahanish, the Mull of Islay, and the Paps of Jura; also the cemetery at Kilkerran, with the points of Saddle, Carrdell and Skipness. As the north and south shores of Campbeltown are both pleasant and healthy, they are the residence of many respectable families; and in the neighbourhood the seats of D. S. Galbraith, G. Macneal, J. L. Stewart, and J. E. Campbell, Esqrs. deserve particular notice. A regatta and horse races are held annually in the summer. The market is on Thursday, and the fairs on the first Thursday in February, the third Thursday in May and November, the second Thursday in August, the third Tuesday in September, and the Tuesday before the last Wednesday in October.

SALT-PANS, so called from salt having been made here from sea-water, is a small village, five miles west of Campbeltown, on the southern shore of Macrahanish bay, the dashing of whose waves can be heard to a great distance; and the continual heavy swell here, caused by the Atlantic rolling in between Islay and the northern coast of Ireland, is justly dreaded by the mariner. In the village is an excellent parochial school. Nearly half a mile south is 'Lossit House,' the tasteful and modern mansion of George Macneal, Esq. of Ugadale; and a mile on the way to Campbeltown, at Drumleman, is the Campbeltown colliery, the only work of the kind in the county: the coal lies in a bed of considerable thickness, is rather inferior in quality, and is conveyed in small boats, on a canal constructed on purpose, without locks, to Campbeltown.

SADDEL and SKIPNESS form a united parish, situate at the inner extremity of the peninsula of Kintyre; the village of Saddle being about ten miles north of Campbeltown: it contains the ancient castle of Somerled, the great chieftain and founder of the clan Macdonald; and the ruins of a monastery, of the Cistercian order, founded by Somerled in 1160. Saddle is now the family residence of D. S. Galbraith, Esq. whose mansion stands in a very eligible situation, in the centre of this fine glen. The ancient castle, which is still entire, and the ruins of the monastery, in which is the cemetery of the ancient Macdonald family, are well worthy of being visited by the curious traveller.

CLACHAN, TAYENLOANE, KILLEAN, GLENBARR,

AND BALLACHANTUIE, WITH THE ISLANDS OF GIGHA, CARA AND THEIR VICINITIES.

CLACHAN is a village, in the parish of Kilcalmonell, situate in a fine valley, on the banks of a small stream, over which is a good stone bridge, and on the road from Tarbert to Campbeltown, 11 miles south of the former, and 26 north of the latter place. In the village is the parish church, a chapel for independents, and the parochial school; and a little to the east is the neat residence of Angus Macalister, Esq., of Balinakill, who is proprietor of the village. In the vicinity, to the north-west, is a vitrified fort on a large scale, and another contiguous fortification in ruins; and among the hills to the east are several beautiful fresh water lochs, well stored with trout. Seven miles south, on the same road, and near the coast, is

TAYENLOANE, a small village, in the parish of Killean: about half a mile in a northern direction is the mansion of the late Sir Charles M. Lockhart, Bart.; and opposite the village, but separated from the main land by a sound about four miles broad, is the island of

GIGHA, which is nearly six miles long, and from two to three broad; it is the property of John M'Neill, Esq. of Colonsay, and the Misses Lockharts.

CARA, a neighbouring island, which is about one mile in length, was the property of Sir C. M. Lockhart; but, since his demise, it has, with the principal part of his property, been involved in litigation.

KILLEAN is about four miles south of Tayenloane. Near the road stands the parish church, a small neat stone building, erected in 1787, and the parochial school. Seals are very frequently seen lying on the rocks near the coast. Nearly three miles south from Killean, and twelve north of Campbeltown, is the village of

GLENBARR is situate on the banks of the Barr water (which is well stocked with fine salmon and trout), and nearly a mile from the shore, in a rich and well cultivated glen. 'Barr House', the property of Keith Macalister, Esq. is a fine structure, built in the gothic style, and from its site there is an extensive view of the sea and the north-east coast of Ireland. Three miles S. of Glenbarr, and nine and a half N. W. of Campbeltown, on the main road near the shore, is

BALLACHANTUIE, a small village in the united parish of Killean and Kilchenzie, containing a small church, erected in 1825. The road between this village and Campbeltown has been much improved of late years, and a new line, several miles in length, has been cut along the shore, at a great expense, to avoid the hills on the old road. The chief employment of the people on this coast is fishing and agriculture.

DUNOON AND NEIGHBOURHOOD.

DUNOON is a genteel and thriving little town, in the parish of its name, on the western shore of the frith of Clyde, and the principal place in the extensive district of Cowal; 27 miles s.e. of Inverary, 21 s.e. of Strachur, and 7 s. of Kilmun; and by sea it is 74 miles w. of Edinburgh, 30 w. of Glasgow, 10 N. of Rothesay, 8 w. of Greenock, and 4 w. of Gourock. The prosperity of this place entirely arises from its peculiarly pleasant situation, having in front the famed frith of Clyde, always studded with numerous sailing and steam vessels. The town extends over a considerable space, few of the streets being as yet complete, but those of Argyle and Hillfoot already contain several buildings of a respectable order; and along the shore, for a distance of two miles in both directions, there are several ranges of genteel looking and well furnished houses, for the accommodation of families who resort hither in the summer season for sea bathing: intermixed with these are many tasteful country houses belonging to the commercial and professional community of Glasgow and the neighbouring towns. This place is almost entirely of recent erection, the first house for sea bathing quarters having been built in 1821, at which time there were only three slated houses, and the population was not above one hundred. The pier is a wooden structure, about three hundred feet long and twenty broad, with a projection, nearly at right angles with the end, ninety feet long and twelve broad, constructed in 1835, at an expense of £1,500: it is a substantial work of the kind, and is very conducive to the convenience, as it is to the prosperity of the town.

The parish church was built in 1816, and considerably enlarged in 1835, containing at present nearly nine hundred sittings; it is a gothic edifice, with a square tower, and stands on an eminence in a conspicuous situation. A chapel of ease to Dunoon was erected near Toward lighthouse, seven miles south-west, in 1836-7, by subscription; it is a neat gothic structure, containing two hundred sittings, and cost £400. A secession church was erected in Argyle-st, in 1828, containing about 300 sittings; but in consequence of the crowded state of this church in summer, it is in contemplation to add a gallery. An excellently conducted parochial and other schools are in the town and neighbourhood. About two miles north-east is Hafton-quay, a good stone structure, with a wooden projection and slip, built in 1828. Nearly a mile further, at the entrance of Holy Loch, on its southern shore, is 'Hafton House,' the property and family residence of James Hunter, Esq. of Hafton, a fine and good looking mansion, in a pleasant situation, among thriving plantations and tastefully arranged pleasure grounds. About half a mile beyond Hafton House is the quarantine station and lazaretto, built in 1807, a very spacious erection, in two equal parts, each capable of holding and exposing to the purifying influence of the atmosphere one thousand bales of cotton. In Holy Loch fifteen hundred vessels may ride in perfect safety, whatever may be the state of the weather.—The population of the town of Dunoon, in 1836, was about 1,100; but during four or five months in the summer season it is double that number.

POST OFFICE, Argyle street, Robert Brown, Post Master.—Letters to EDINBURGH, GREENOCK, and all parts are despatched (by steamer) every morning (Sunday excepted) at six, and afternoon at four, in summer, and every morning at half-past seven, and noon at twelve, in winter; and arrive every morning at nine, and evening at seven, in summer, and every morning at ten, and afternoon at four, in winter: every Sunday morning they are despatched at ten, and arrive at eleven, in summer, and are despatched in the forenoon at eleven, and arrive at twelve, in winter.—Letters are despatched (by private foot post) to GLEN-DERUAL every Wednesday and Saturday morning, and arrive every Tuesday and Friday evening.

EASDALE AND ITS VICINITY.

EASDALE is a village partly situate on the island of its name, and partly on the island of Seil, from which it is separated by a narrow sound; it is 16 miles s. w. by s. of Oban, 30 N. N. W. of Lochgilphead, 40 w. of Inverary, and 142 w. of Edinburgh. Easdale is chiefly remarkable for its slate quarries, which are said to have been open above 300 years; they are the property of the Most Noble the Marquess of Breadalbane, and are wrought by the Nether Lorn Slate Company, who have, besides the quarries at Easdale, three others, two on the island of Luing, and one on the island of Seil; which, altogether employ about 250 men, and produce about 12,000 tons of slate annually, of an acknowledged superior quality, which is exported to all parts of Scotland and the North of England. Several of the quarries are considerably below the sea; they are kept dry by pumping with small steam

INVERARY AND ITS VICINITY.

INVERARY, a royal burgh, the seat of a presbytery, and the county town of Argyleshire, is 102 miles w. by N. of Edinburgh, 60 N. W. of Glasgow, 32 S. E. of Oban, by Port Sonachan ferry, and 42 by Dalmally, avoiding the ferry, 20 S. E. of Bonarve, 24 N. E. of Lochgilphead, and 76 N. N. E. of Campbeltown. It is delightfully situated on the north-western shore of Loch Fyne, on a point of land forming the southern side of a fine bay, which receives the waters of the Aray and the Shiira; the first has an elegant stone bridge of two arches, and is within half a mile of the town, the second is about 1½ mile E., and is crossed by a bridge of one arch. Loch Fyne terminates about nine miles above the town, and from the fineness of its scenery, and the richness of its herrings, is justly remarkable; and the value of herrings taken out of the loch in a single season, often amounts to £30,000., and there are frequently from 300 to 400 boats engaged at once on its waters; the loch is 50 miles long, and is about 10 broad below Loch Gilp, but seldom exceeding 3 above Otterferry. A short distance from the town, at the extremity of the bay, stands Inverary castle, the princely residence of the Duke of Argyle. The architecture of this mansion is highly finished gothic, and its site particularly beautiful and commanding. From its southern front there is an extensive view for several miles down Loch Fyne, and of the adjacent lofty mountains, which are adorned with fine plantations to their summits. On entering the bay, the castle has a very majestic appearance, and the rising woods, which, for a considerable distance, adorn the domain, give the town an appearance of grandeur. Every stranger is struck with the neatness of the town, which, though small, is well built, and some of the houses approach to elegance. The park and grounds of the castle present a drive, almost in a direct line, of above ten miles, with several others of great extent, all thrown open to the public.

A fishery, a great proportion of the produce of which is sent to the Glasgow market. From a convenient part of the town, and projecting from the shore, is a well-built quay, which it is intended to extend 100 feet further into the bay, with the addition of a slip. In the town are two bank branches, one of the National Bank of Scotland, the other of the Renfrewshire Banking Company; there is also a bank for savings, and three excellent inns. There is a daily communication with Glasgow throughout the year, by means of a small steamer, across Loch Fyne to St. Catherine's, and also by the Castle Company's steam boats, which sail three times a week in summer and once during the same period in winter. Inverary was erected into a burgh by charter, granted by Charles I. in 1648; and its government vested in a provost, two bailies, dean of guild, with eleven councillors, a town clerk, and treasurer. The burgh unites with CAMPBELTOWN and OBAN in this county, and with AVR and IRVINE in Ayrshire, in sending one member to parliament. The court house and gaol is a substantial building of stone, situate on the shore, and has an imposing appearance when seen from the Loch. A sheriff's court is held every Monday and Thursday, from the 15th May to the end of July, and from the 15th October to the 4th April; a justice of peace small debt court sits every Wednesday, and a borough court daily, during the above periods.

The places of worship are a neat stone church, situate in the main street, in which the service is performed both in the Gaelic and English tongue, and a secession chapel, erected in 1836, on land given by D. Paterson, esq. A parochial burgh or grammar school, and a female charity school are supported by the Duke of Argyle. Fairs are held here the Friday after the last Wednesday in May, and the Thursday after the last Wednesday in October, for black cattle; the great wool fairs are held on the second Friday after the second Thursday in July.

POST OFFICE, INVERARY, Miss Catherine Maclean, Post Mistress.—Letters to EDINBURGH, GLASGOW, DUMBERTON, CAIRNDOW, ARROCHAR and LUSS are despatched (by mail gig) every forenoon at twenty minutes before twelve, and arrive every day at twelve.—Letters to OBAN, BONARVE, DALMALLY and KILKILCHREAN are despatched (by mail gig) every day at twenty minutes before one, and arrive every forenoon at half-past eleven.—Letters to LOCHGILPHEAD, &c. are despatched (by horse post) every Sunday, Wednesday and Friday afternoon at one, and arrive the same forenoons at eleven.—Letters to DALAVICH are despatched and arrive (by private foot post) every Monday.

ISLAND OF ISLAY, INCLUDING BOWMORE,

PORT ASKAIG, PORT CHARLOTTE, PORT ELLEN, PORT NAHAVEN AND THEIR VICINITIES.

ISLAY is a large island, and the most southerly of those called the Hebrides; in length from north to south it is about thirty miles, and its extreme land-breadth about eighteen. Askaig, the most northern port on the island, is distant from Edinburgh (by way of Tarbert,) 179 miles, from Inverary 76, and from Tarbert 40. It lies in a westerly direction from the peninsula of Kintyre, distant from it about 12 miles, and is separated, on the north, from the island of Jura by a narrow channel. It composes three parochial divisions, namely, Bowmore (or Killarrow), Kilchoman, and Kildalton. The shore is very rugged, but the face of the country is finely varied by hill and dale: many parts are well planted, and the island contains several beautiful lakes, well stocked with most delicious trout. The land is tolerably cultivated, but it is still susceptible of greater improvement. Upwards of two thousand head of black cattle, and several hundred horses, peculiarly adapted for small carriages, are annually exported, besides sheep. An immense quantity of superior whisky, the produce of the ten distilleries in the island, is also exported, chiefly to Glasgow. A company, called the Islay Mining Company, has been lately formed, for the purpose of extracting some of the minerals said to abound here, particularly lead and iron. The lead mines are said to be very rich in silver, and the iron ore of a superior quality; but the want of coal will be a great obstacle to the successful operations of the company. The island is the property of W. F. Campbell, Esq., of Islay, member for the county, except Sunderland, the well cultivated estate and family residence of Captain Walter Campbell, and the small estate of Balmahy, belonging to Colin Campbell, Esq. There are many ruinous remains of ancient castles, churches, &c. scattered over the Island; but perhaps the most remarkable natural curiosity in this part of the empire is Slochd Mhaol Dorrie, a large basin formed in the rock by the action of the sea, on the south-west point of Lagan Bay, about nine miles from Bowmore, into which the turbulent waters the western ocean rush, by two channels in the rock, covered with natural arches: the grandeur of the scene presented during the flowing of the tide is truly inconceivable.

BOWMORE, the principal place on the island, is situate on the east side of Loch Indaal, 11 miles s. of Port Askaig, and 3 s. of Islay House. The town consists of two principal streets, with several lesser ones, having a good quay. There are some trading vessels belonging to the town, and it is a place of considerable business. The public buildings are the parish church, a circular edifice, with a peculiarly formed spire, and a building originally intended for a gaol, but now appropriated to the use of a public library, containing upwards of 3,700 volumes. The assembly-room, on the same floor as the library, is generally open as a news and reading room. There is also a large and excellent parochial school, with a house for the master, built and liberally endowed by Campbell of Islay. At Bridge-End, three miles north

POST OFFICE, BRIDGE-END, Duane M'Alister, Post Master.—Letters to EDINBURGH, GLASGOW, and all parts are despatched every Wednesday night in time for the Maid of Islay steamer, and arrive every Tuesday evening in summer, and Wednesday morning in winter.—Letters are also despatched to the same places (by foot post) every Monday, Thursday and Saturday at twelve, and arrive the same nights about midnight in summer, but generally on Tuesday, Friday and Sunday mornings in winter.

POST OFFICE, PORT ASKAIG, Neill Currie, Post Master.—Letters to EDINBURGH, GREENOCK, TARBERT, &c. are despatched (by steamer) every Thursday morning at four in summer, and at seven in winter; and arrive every Tuesday evening in summer, and every Wednesday at noon in winter.—Letters are also despatched to EDINBURGH, LOCHGILPHEAD, &c. (by foot post) every Monday, Thursday and Saturday afternoon at four, and arrive the same nights in summer, but generally on Tuesday, Friday and Sunday mornings in winter.—Letters to BOWMORE, &c. are despatched immediately on their arrival, and arrive in time for the Edinburgh, &c. mails or post.

POST, Receiving house, BOWMORE, Hugh M'Gilvray, Depute Post Master.—Letters to BRIDGE-END and all parts are despatched one hour earlier than from Bridge-End, and arrive one hour later.

POST, Receiving house, KILCHOMAN, Archibald Gilchrist, Depute Post Master.—Letters to BRIDGE-END, and all parts are despatched two hours and a half earlier than from Bridge-End, and arrive two hours and a half later.

POST, Receiving house, PORT ELLEN, John M'Kerrall, Depute Post Master.—Letters to BRIDGE-END are despatched four hours earlier than from Bridge-End, and arrive four hours later.

of Bowmore, and eight miles south of Port Askaig, is a good Inn, where a court is held once a month for the recovery of small debts and the trial of petty offences. Newton distillery is about half a mile north of the Inn; and at a little distance to the west stands 'Islay House,' the mansion of Campbell of Islay; it is surrounded with fine gardens and well planted grounds, situate at the head of Loch Indaal, of which it commands a fine view, as well as of the adjacent country.

PORT ASKAIG is a small creek or harbour on the north side of the island, opposite Jura, from which it is separated by the sound of Islay, about a mile broad; the port is 11 miles s. of Bowmore, and has the only quay on the island where vessels of considerable burden can load and unload at low water. There is an excellent and commodious Inn here; and being the nearest port to Glasgow, with which city there is a regular communication by steam vessels once a week, Port Askaig is the place of general resort on landing on or leaving the island.

PORT CHARLOTTE is a small village, in the parish of Kilchoman, on the west side of Loch Indaal, nearly opposite to Bowmore; it is 16 miles s. w. of Port Askaig, and contains a good inn, a distillery, and an independent chapel.

PORT ELLEN is a sea-port and village, in the parish of Kildalton, on the east side of the island; 11 miles s. e. of Bowmore, and 22 s. of Port Askaig. In 1824 there stood only one house here, though in 1836 there were above one hundred and fifty, the population in that year being 803. The bay is considered safe, and is nearly a mile wide; the quay is commodious, and is formed on a rocky promontory near the middle of the harbour; the quay was erected in 1826, and enlarged and improved in 1832, by Campbell of Islay, who also erected a lighthouse. The village is substantially built, and contains a neat and comfortable inn, and the largest distillery in the county. The inhabitants are principally employed in agriculture and fishing; and the prosperity of the village is much increased by the regular visit of a steam vessel from Campbelltown and Glasgow.

PORTNAHAVEN is a small village and sea-port, 24 miles s.w. of Port Askaig, and 16 s.w. of Bridge-End. It is at the southern extremity of the island, having a quay formed by the rocks on the shore; and near the port is an elegant lighthouse, erected in 1824-5. Here is also a parliamentary church and a parochial school.

The fairs on the island of Islay are held as follow:—at Bowmore, on the 15th of February, the first Thursdays after the 12th of August and the 12th of November, for horses, and the Tuesday next before the 12th of November, for cattle: at Bridge-End, on the last Tuesdays in June, July, August, and September, and the Tuesday next before the last Tuesday in October, for black cattle and horses: and at Ballochroy, near Port Askaig, on the Wednesday next before the last Wednesday in May, for horses and black cattle; this fair generally continues three days.

THE ISLE OF JURA,

WITH THOSE OF BELNAHUA AND PLEDDA, COLONSAY, GARVELLOCH, LUNGA, ORANSEY, AND SCARBA, WITH MILLTOWN VILLAGE.

JURA, an island of the Hebrides, is 33 miles long and from 2 to 10 miles broad, separated from Knappdale, on the western coast of Scotland, by the sound of Jura (ten miles broad), and from the island of Islay, to the south, by the sound of Islay (about a mile broad), and, with the other islands, forms the united parish of Jura and Colonsay. Jura belongs to Colin Campbell, esq. of Jura, whose two sons reside at Ardfin, which is a respectable mansion on the south shore of the island, and who are very extensive graziers, breeding large numbers of both black cattle and sheep. The most remarkable object in the isle is the Paps of Jura, an eminence towering nearly 2,500 feet above the level of the sea; they are three in number, standing on the same ridge, but having two valleys separating them; the tops are round, and consist for some distance, down the sides, of loose stones, rendering the ascent difficult; the top of the highest, called Beinman-Oir, is about six miles from the village of Milltown. The island also contains several caves, one of them is so large, that, it is said, a regiment of soldiers might perform their exercise in its spacious arena. To the north of the island, in a strait, near a mile broad, separating the island of Scarba from Jura, is the gulph of Corry Vreckan, where the rush of waters is so great, during the ebbing of the tide, as to form a most terrible whirlpool, the noise of which can be heard for many miles.

BELNAHUA and PLADDA, two small islands to the north of Scarba, contain several quarries of excellent blue slate, the property of Mr. John Stevenson; they are at present wrought by Mr. Campbell Paterson; the number of men generally employed is about 60.

COLONSAY, a rather high rocky island to the west of Jura, twelve miles long, and about three broad, is the property of John M'Neill, Esq., of Colonsay, who has a good mansion house on the island at Killoran. The ruinous sacred buildings, and the numerous inscriptions on the grave stones covering the ashes of the illustrious dead, are considered by many almost equal to those found on the island of Iona.

GARVELLOCH, or Holy Island, contains an extensive old fort, called Dunconnel, once a strong hold belonging to the Lords of the Isles; and on one of them, called the Nun's Island, are considerable remains of an old nunnery, said to have been founded by St. Columbus.

DRANSAY, a small island to the south of Colonsay, contains the residence of Capt. Alexander M'Neill.

MILLTOWN, frequently called Craighouse, the principal village on Jura, is eight miles from Port Askaig ferry. It has a good quay, and the harbour, which is large, and formed by several small islands, has obtained the appellation of Small Isles harbour. About half a mile north of the village, is the parish church and parochial school. Alexander Kennedy is the respected minister of the united parish of Jura and Colonsay. The village contains a distillery, a comfortable inn, and a corn mill.

The united parish of Jura and Colonsay, comprising seven inhabited islands, contained, in 1836, a population of 2,297; Jura containing 1,228, Colonsay and Oransay 839, Belnahua 151, Scarba 48, Lunga 24, and Garvelloch 7.

KILMUN AND NEIGHBOURHOOD.

KILMUN, formerly the capital of a parish of the same name, now incorporated with that of Dunoon, is a very pleasant village, situate on the north shore of Holy Loch, 22 miles s. e. of Inverary, 16 s. e. of Strachur, 7 n. of Dunoon, and by sea, 74 w. of Edinburgh, 30 w. of Glasgow, and 8 w. of Greenock. This place may be almost said to owe its origin to the present proprietor, D. Napier, Esq., of Glenshellish, for previously to attracting his notice there were very few dwellings here, whereas it is now a respectable sea-bathing village, much frequented in summer; and possesses every accommodation for the purpose. Holy Loch is full three miles long; at its entrance it is scarcely a mile wide, but within, it expands to a fine sheet of water, extending a mile and a half in width; at its head it receives the lesser and greater Echairst, the latter river flows from Loch Eck, a beautiful fresh water lake, seven miles long and one broad, whose steep rugged shores, rising to a considerable height, form a striking contrast, on a fine day, to its wide placid waters. Both the loch, and the two rivers before mentioned, afford plenty of sport to the angler, and the ride through this valley to Strachur, or Loch Fyne, is seldom exceeded for wild and sublime scenery. Of the ancient history of Kilmun little is known, but its old church, the mausoleum of the ducal family of Argyle, and especially the tower of the original church, evidence it to have been, in former times, a place of some note. The present church being small and insecure, is about to be replaced, except its venerable tower (which is to undergo repair and improvement), by a new edifice. The quay was built by the proprietor, D. Napier, Esq., in 1829, and will admit the steam boats alongside at all states of the tide. Opposite the village is the extensive quarantine station for the Clyde, and the elegant modern mansion of James Hunter, Esq. of Hafton. The population of the village in 1836 was about 200, but during a few months of the summer that number is generally doubled.

POST OFFICE, Neil Douglass, Post Master.—Letters from GREENOCK, and all parts arrive and are despatched (by steam boat) every afternoon (Sunday excepted) at half-past one.

LOCHGILPHEAD, ADDRISSAIG, BELLANACH,*KILMARTIN, KILMICHAEL AND NEIGHBOURHOODS.

LOCHGILPHEAD is a post village, pleasantly situate at the northern extremity of Loch Gilp, from which it derives its name. It is 125 miles west of Edinburgh, 53 north of Campbeltown, 24 south-west of Inverary, and 15 north of Tarbert. The town is of recent erection, its site containing only two or three fishermen's huts at the commencement of the present century; it now consists of several well formed streets, the foot-paths of which are well flagged, more so than any other town in the county; and the inhabitants are plentifully supplied with water, conveyed by pipes into each of the principal streets, from two fountains, on the north side of the town. A court is held here on the first Tuesday in every month, for the recovery of debts not exceeding £5. Lochgilphead is rapidly improving; in front of the main street a part of the Loch has been walled off, and a new piece of ground made for the convenience of the large cattle fairs or markets. A new level road is also formed to Lochgear, a distance of eight miles, which is of essential service, as it avoids the hills that obstructed the road from Lochgilphead to Inverary. The principal employment of the inhabitants is agriculture and fishing. A little above the town is Lochgilphead distillery, and about half way to Ardriassaig, on the south bank of the canal, is Glenkilp distillery; there is also another at Glenmore, situate at a considerable distance to the north of Lochgilphead. Behind the town runs a small stream, which supplies a dye-house, and gives motion to two or three mills. On the Kilmory side of the town is a quay for the accommodation of the small craft engaged in the herring fishery. A parliamentary church was erected, at the head of Argyle-street, in 1827-8, and in 1834 galleries were added; there is also an independent chapel in the same street, and a secession meeting-house near Colchester-square. Several respectable private schools are in the town, and a parochial one a little to the north of it. Within half a mile to the west stands 'Oakfield,' the residence of Alexander Campbell, Esq.; a mile to the south-east is 'Kilmory House,' the seat and property of Sir John Poulett Orde, Bart. who has almost entirely rebuilt the mansion house, on an extensive scale, in the old English style, under the superintendance of Mr. J. G. Davis, of London; the house, surrounded with its well wooded grounds, forms a conspicuous and interesting feature in the landscape from all parts of the loch, especially from Ardriassaig, which is directly opposite. Ten miles north-west is 'Duntroon Castle,' the property and occasional residence of Neill Malcolm, Esq. of Poltalloch, who possesses extensive demesnes in this part of the county, and who has, during the last thirty years, converted above two thousand acres of soft peat moss on his estate, at the head of Loch Crinan, about two miles from the castle, into excellent corn and grazing land, under the judicious management of his farm overseer, Mr. James Gow. The farm is very appropriately called 'Experiment.' The fairs are held on the third Thursday in March, for horses; on the second Wednesday and Thursday after the 26th of May, for black cattle and hiring servants; on the last Thursday in September, and the second Wednesday and Thursday in November, for black cattle; and on the second Thursday after the last Thursday in November, for horses and hiring servants. A prize show of cattle, horses, sheep, &c. takes place about the latter end of September. The population, in 1836, was 1,438.

ADDRISSAIG, two miles south, contains about four hundred inhabitants, who are chiefly engaged in fishing and providing accommodations for the numerous steam-packet passengers calling here, for whom excellent arrangements are made, almost every house being provided with one or more beds for their reception; and several of the lodging-houses are of a respectable order. This place may be said to be the port to Lochgilphead. In addition to a protective pier of four hundred yards in length, with a small light-house at its extremity, a commodious pier and slip within the harbour, which will have a depth of seven feet at low water, is now in the course of erection by the government commissioners of the Crinan canal, which commences here, and extends to Loch Crinan, a distance of nine miles; obviating a boisterous voyage of forty leagues round the Mull of Kintyre. Steam packets pass the canal on their way from Glasgow to all parts of the western coast, and by the Caledonian canal to Inverness.

BELLANACH is a small village, about six miles west of Lochgilphead, situate in a glen on the southern bank of the Crinan canal, which here forms a fine triangular sheet of water, and terminates at Crinan, about a mile further west. The village contains a sub-post office, and a parochial school.

KILMARTIN, a small village nearly nine miles north of Lochgilphead, contains a comfortable inn, a parochial school, and a parish church, the latter completed in 1836. About half a mile north, amidst beautiful scenery, is 'Kilmartin House,' the commodious mansion of Neill Malcolm, Jun. Esq. of Poltalloch; and about half a mile up the valley, to the north, is seen the beautiful ruins of Carnazarie Castle, formerly the residence of the bishops of Argyle. Eleven miles west of Kilmartin, by a very circuitous road, is 'Craignish Castle,' the residence of Colin Campbell, Esq. of Jura. The fairs are held on the first Thursday in March, for horses, and the fourth Thursday in November, for horses and hiring servants.

KILMICHAEL (or Glassary, as it was formerly called), is a parish, situate betwixt the sound of Jura and Loch Fyne, four miles north-west of Kilmartin. The farm of Balliemore, in this parish, is worthy of mention, as having been changed into fine corn land from a wilderness, during the last five years, by Mr. James Cringan, the spirited occupier. Between Kilmichael and Kilmartin there are numerous druidical remains. Two large and much frequented fairs are held here annually, at which from seven to eight thousand head of black cattle are generally exposed for sale, namely, on the last Wednesday in May, which is also for horses and sheep, and the last Tuesday before the last Wednesday in October, at both of which fairs the hiring of servants takes place.

OBAN AND ITS VICINITY.

OBAN is a modern neat town and seaport in the parish of Kilmory; 136 miles from Edinburgh, 92 from Glasgow, 40 s. s. w. of Fort William, 33 w. n. w. of Inverary, over Port Sonachan ferry, and 30 s. E. of Tobermory: to Vint, Staffa and Iona from hence, going round the island of Mull, the voyage is about 120 miles; and it is about the same distance to Portree, in Skye. The town enjoys a beautiful situation on the west coast of Mid Lorn district, and at the head of a fine bay, formed by the island of Kerrera in front, having an entrance at each end. The bay is from twelve to twenty fathoms deep, is well sheltered by lofty mountains, and large enough to contain upwards of five hundred sail of merchantmen. There are two commodious quays; that on the north was considerably enlarged and improved in 1836. The imports of Oban consist chiefly of merchandise from Glasgow and Liverpool; and its principal exports are whisky and wool. In the town are two distilleries, and the like number of establishments for the manufacture of silk and straw hats: the material for the latter, which is grown in the neighborhood, is of a fine, durable quality, almost equal to the Italian straw. The National Bank of Scotland has a branch here, and there are three excellent inns: the Caledonian Hotel, in George street, is the principal. A quarry of excellent free stone has been lately opened, about four miles south, on the shore of Loch Feochan, on the property of Dugald M'Dougall, Esq., of Gal-lanach. The town is divided by a small river, the south side belonging to Robert Campbell, Esq., of Sonachan, and that part on the north to Charles Campbell, Esq., of Combie. In the eastern division is a small handsome church, erected in 1821, as a chapel of ease to the parish. In Tweeddale street is an independent chapel, built in 1820, and a secession church, opened in 1835. Oban and its vicinity offer many inducements both to the tourist and antiquarian. Among the antiquities may be particularly noticed the ruins of Dunolly Castle, situate a mile north of the town; Dunstaffnage Castle, formerly a royal residence, three miles north of Oban, in the chapel of which there is a remarkable echo; and the ruins of Beregonium, the ancient metropolis of Caledonia, which is distant about six miles north, on the opposite side of Loch Etive; and two miles further north is Barcaldine Castle. From a hill, contiguous to the town, may be seen the distant objects of Duart Castle, in Mull, Ardtornish Castle, in Morven, the Castle of Aross, the Castle of Gealin, in the Island of Kerrera. In visiting these, the antiquarian will find much gratification, all of them having been the residences of the ancient Scotch nobles, and even in their present state, exhibiting proofs of their former strength and grandeur. Oban may also be said to rank among the most healthful and pleasing summer retreats in the Highlands of Scotland. Its situation for bathing is extremely good, and it possesses every accommodation for the convenience of the great number of fashionable and wealthy visitors, who are constantly calling here in summer, on their way to the splendid scenery on the western coast, and in Skye, and to the far-famed islands of Staffa and Iona, imparting a liveliness and interest to the appearance of the town which is very pleasing. The inhabitants, endeavour to imitate the manners and conversation of the visitors, which causes much better English to be spoken, and far more politeness and urbanity of manners to be displayed here than in most other places on this coast.

Steam boats ply between Glasgow, Greenock, Inverness, &c., three times a week; 10 Mull, Staffa and Iona, five or six times a week in summer; to Skye twice, Stornaway once a week, and to Liverpool once a fortnight during the same season. The municipal government of the town is vested in two bailies, and four councillors; and by the reform bill OBAN unites with AYR, CAMPBELTOWN, INVERARY and IRVINE, in sending one member to parliament. The town is well supplied with provisions, and at a low rate. Fairs, for horses, the first Tuesday and following Wednesday in March, and the last Tuesday and following Wednesday in November; also on the Monday and Tuesday before the last Wednesday in May, and Friday and Saturday before last Wednesday in October, for black cattle.

IS a parish situated at the southern extremity of the peninsula of Kintyre; the village, which is sometimes called Newton Argyle, is 10 miles south of Campbeltown. Agriculture and fishing are the predominating occupations of the inhabitants, who, in the summer, reap some advantage from the visits of many strangers to this romantic and interesting part of the country.
About half a mile south of the village stands the rock
Donnavertie, a spot very interesting to the historian, and the antiquarian; having been the scene of many sanguinary conflicts, with the details of which the intelligent villagers are very conversant; especially the massacre of three hundred of the M'Donalds here by General Leslie, after capitulation, in 1647. Few traces of the castle are now remaining, but a mile and a half west stand the walls of a church, said to have been founded by St. Columba, who landed in Scotland in 563. It was called Cill-Cholum-Chille, and the burial ground is divided by a small stream, on the north side of which the Highlanders are interred, and on the south the Lowlanders. A little to the north of the village stands the parish church; and, in the village, the relief church. The parochial school here is a substantial building, and a well-conducted institution.

Mr. Archibald M'Neil is the present able and intelligent master.

TARBERT (EAST AND WEST), WITH THEIR VICINITIES.

TARBERT, or, as it is sometimes designated, EAST TARBERT, is a small fishing port and village, situate at the head of a fine sheltered harbour on Loch Fyne.
It is 139 miles w. of Edinburgh, 37 N. by E. of Campbeltown, 39 s. s. w. of Inverary, and 15 s. of Lochgilphead. The town or village may be said to form a semi-circle round the harbour; the latter, which is small, and the entrance to it narrow, having several sunken rocks, is difficult of access; but when a vessel has once entered, no water affords more perfect shelter and security. The quays are very commodious; and for a series of years it has been a noted fishing station, particularly for herrings, which are mostly cured for the Glasgow market. In a commanding situation, overlooking the town and harbour, are the remains of an ancient castle and fortification; and immediately behind the village, in a southern direction, is a small comfortable kirk, and an excellent school; the latter supported by the general assembly, and ably conducted by Mr. Daniel Murray.

Distant one mile s. by w. is the village of WEST TARBERT: it has a good quay, and is seated at the head of a loch of the same name, which begins here, and in a circuitous route winds through the mountains to Ardpatrik, beyond which it empties itself into the ocean. At the head of the loch, previous to reaching West Tarbert village, the roads branch one to the E. and the other to the w. side of the loch, on a line to Ardpatrick. Hence the road winds through a fine country, in which many of the mountains are, by their much respected owner, Lieut.-Gen. Robert Campbell, of Kintarbert, planted to their summits. At intervals the waters of the loch below vary the scene, by expanding in many parts to a mile in breadth. About the sixth mile on this road is Drumore, the residence of James Campbell, Esq.; the house is hid by its plantations from the road; but from its site there is a pleasing view of the loch and opposite shore.

Four miles further on is the domain of Ardpatrik, the residence of Capt. Colin Campbell, R.N. possessing every requisite for a summer residence. At the foot of this domain is a ferry, by which the traveller may pass to the opposite side of West Tarbert loch.

From Ardpatrick a road branches to the west; at a distance of four miles Carse is passed, the new mansion of Capt. John Campbell; eight miles beyond this is Drimdrissaig, the property and residence of Lachlan Macneill, Esq., whose efforts have proved so successful in improving the breeds of cattle, sheep, &c. in this part of the country. A mile and a half beyond Drimdrissaig is Ormsary, the seat of William Alexander Campbell, Esq. The eastern road runs through the village of West Tarbert to Clachan. Near the sixth mile-stone is the village of WHITEHOUSE, containing a societies' school, and about half a mile above the village is Stonefield, the fine mansion and extensive domain of John Campbell, Esq. who is proprietor of the town and neighbourhood of Tarbert, and who is erecting a new mansion in an enchanting spot, about two miles north of the village, on the west shore of Loch Fyne. About two miles south of Stonefield, and a little below the road, is the neat residence of Lieut-General Robert Campbell, commanding a pleasant view of West Tarbert loch, and the adjacent country. In Tarbert there is an extensive annual fair, which commences on the last Wednesday in July, o. s. and continues three days, for the sale of merchandize and horses.

POST OFFICE, TARBERT, John M'Lachlan, Post Master.—Letters to GLASGOW, EDINBURGH, &c. are despatched (by steamer) every morning (Sunday excepted) from six to nine, according to tide, and arrive every day from twelve to three.—Letters to CAMPBELTOWN are despatched (by horse post) every day (Sunday excepted) on the arrival of the Glasgow, &c. mail, and arrive every morning (Monday excepted) at six.—Letters to ISLAY are despatched (by steamer) every Tuesday afternoon at three during summer, and every Wednesday morning at six during winter; all other days the Islay letters go in the Lochgilphead bag, from whence they are forwarded.—Letters to LOCHGILPHEAD and INVERARY are despatched (by steamer) every day (Sunday excepted) from twelve to three, and arrive every morning from six to nine.

WITH THE ISLANDS OF MULL, STAFFA, IONA, ULVA, TYREE AND COLL, AND THE DISTRICTS OF ARDNAMURCHAN AND MORVEN.

TOBERMORY is a thriving seaport in the island of Mull; 171 miles w.n.w. of Edinburgh, 62 n.w. of Inverary, and 30 n.w. of Oban. It encircles the extremity of a fine sheltered bay, and is one of the safest harbours among the Western Isles, being protected from the sound of Mull by an island which stretches nearly across the entrance, but leaving ample room at its northern point for the largest vessels to enter the harbour—though none but small craft can effect this at the south-east point, even at high water. The town is between two and three miles from the mainland of Morven, and derives its name from a celebrated well or spring, called Mary's well, to which the vulgar superstitiously ascribed many imaginary virtues.

The Spanish ship Florida, when at anchor here in the 16th century, was destroyed by an emissary of Queen Elizabeth's government: part of the wood of this vessel was presented to his Majesty George IV., on his visit to Edinburgh, by Sir Walter Scott. On the west side of the town are the remains of an ancient chapel, dedicated to the Virgin, and of a fortification, understood to be of Norwegian origin. Tobermory belongs to the British society for extending the fisheries and improving the sea-coast of the kingdom. The town was commenced about 1790, is well built, and possesses two good quays: the new quay was begun in 1835, by Colonel Campbell, of Knock, and when completed it will be about four feet deep at low water, being two feet deeper than the old quay; the former is a little to the north of the latter, and nearer to the entrance of the bay. The town has increased considerably in this direction of late years; and the harbour is much frequented, both by steamers and sailing vessels. The church, which was erected in 1827-8, at the expense of parliament, stands in a fine prominent situation, behind the principal part of the town and overlooking the bay; adjoining the church is a school connected with the general assembly, and completed in 1832. In the immediate neighbourhood is a beautiful loch, called Mary's lake, situate between two finely wooded hills, extremely precipitous in their descent: this pleasing spot belongs to Hugh Maclean, Esq., of Coll, who has improved it in a manner highly creditable to his taste, and erected an elegant mansion on the banks of the lake. The tourist will be much gratified by visiting this picturesque scenery, including the three cascades, one of which is particularly grand. Tobermory is the only village in Mull, or the neighbouring islands, of any consequence; its trade is chiefly domestic, with a tolerably good herring fishery. The sheriff substitute holds a court here once a month; and it is the polling place, at county elections, for all electors residing in the islands of Mull, Coll, Iona, Tyree, Ulva, and in Morven. By ascending a hill in the neighbourhood, a view may be had of the islands of Tyree, Coll, Egg, Muck, Skye, and various others of smaller importance. The population of Tobermory is nearly 1,500.

MULL, which is about 24 miles long, and in some places almost as broad, has been much improved of late. Benmore, the highest mountain in the island, is said to approach 3,000 feet above the level of the sea. The island contains many remains of ancient castles, &c., among which those of Duart and Aross, on the sound of Mull, are well deserving of a visit from the stranger. Fairs in Mull: at Fishnish, a large horse-fair is held on the first Friday after the 20th of August, and for cattle in May and October; at Ross, fairs are held a few days before those at Fishnish.

The celebrated island of STAFFA is about 15 miles distant from Mull. To give a description of this most magnificent production of nature is, it must be confessed, extremely difficult: all who have seen Fingal's cave concur in opinion that, when it first bursts upon the view, the effect is indescribable—awe and astonishment so completely fill the mind, that there is no room for minor emotions. The island is about a mile long, and a quarter of a mile broad; and is almost entirely composed of hard dark-blue stone, called by geologists trap; it is not in large misshapen masses, however, or formed into layers, as rocks are in most other places; but stands in pillars, close to one another—most of them upright, some much bent, while others lie almost horizontally: they are not round, but have various numbers of faces—some having three, some four, five, six, seven, eight, nine, and even ten, while others have one half circular, and another angular; they are from one to three feet in diameter, and from 12 to 90 feet in height. Staffa is visited five or six times a week by the steam-boat from Oban; the visitors are generally landed at Fingal's cave, stay about an hour on the island to examine its wonders, and proceed to view, for a similar length of time—

The far-famed island of IONA, the earth of which may be termed royal. It was once the luminary of the Caledonian regions, "whence savage clans and roving barbarians derived the benefits of knowledge, and the blessings of religion." It is separated from Mull by a channel of about a mile in width; and is resorted to during summer by the antiquarian, the historian, the tourist, and even the fashionable, who crowd numerously, some to explore or examine, and others to behold and admire, the sacred ruins that on landing arrest the attention of every stranger; these are pointed out by the venerable schoolmaster, who appears to have applied much research to ascertain the correct history of the infinite number of objects which here present themselves for inspection and curiosity. Here the visitor finds himself surrounded by the graves of those who were royal, and noble, and holy in Caledonia and Hibernia a thousand years ago; while the thick walls, the massive arches, and the finely wrought pillars of the many sacred edifices which, in remote ages, flourished in this sanctified isle, supply the deepest reflections, and awaken the most solemn feelings in the contemplative mind. A parliamentary church was erected here in 1828; and there is a society's school which was built in 1766; the present master, Allan McLean, has been the conductor of this seminary since the year 1790. The inhabitants have lately made a profitable traffic by disposing of the channel pebbles to the visitors, who now frequent the island. They assert, that pebbles of a certain appearance are endowed with many secret virtues, given to them by their tutelar saint, Columba.

The island of ULVA, separated from Mull by a channel of about 100 yards broad, is said to produce the best kelp in the Western Highlands. There is a great number of basaltic columns on the shore. It is now the property of Francis Clark, Esq., who resides on the island.

TYREE, westward of Mull, is a very fertile island; it also abounds in marble, of which, it is said, the rocks on its shore are entirely composed; but, from some unexplained cause, the quarries cannot be profitably worked. A new harbour is being formed at Heynish: the quay was commenced in 1836, under the able superintendance of Mr. George Stevenson, civil engineer. A lighthouse, likewise, is proposed to be erected on the dangerous rocks called Sciravore, which lie about 16 miles south west of Tyree.

COLL, to the north of Tyree, is rather a sterile and mountainous island. On it are the ruins of a castle, which appear to advantage from the sea.

ARDNAMURCHAN, chiefly known from the dangers frequently encountered in the navigation around its projecting point, particularly in boisterous weather, when the tremendous billows of the North Atlantic break against it with awful fury, is a district of considerable length; having Loch Sunart to the south, the Atlantic to the west, the same ocean and Loch Shiel to the north, and Ardgorr to the east. It is sterile, but feeds large flocks of sheep, and some cattle; and the hills are stated to be rich in minerals.

MORVEN is an extensive district; bounded on the south-west by the sound of Mull, on the north by Loch Sunart, and on the east and south-east by Loch Linnhe. The country is hilly, and its shores are partially wooded. It is principally occupied in grazing farms, and contains several respectable gentlemen's seats, but no village of sufficient consequence to command attention.

In concluding our sketch of these interesting and not wholly unimportant islands, and the parallel districts on the mainland, we may observe that the scenery connected with them is of a description not easily to be forgotten, by those who have once visited them, and is justly portrayed by the incomparable Scott in his 'Lord of the Isles.' Ardmorish castle, in Morven, so often alluded to by the bard, is well worthy the tourist's notice; as are the interesting remains of Aross castle, the ancient residence of the kings or Lords of the Isles—and Castle Duart, formerly the residence of the M'Leans, in Mull, with Castle Doonan, in the district of Lismore.

AYRSHIRE.

THIS is a populous maritime county, on the western coast of the Lowlands; stretching upwards of 70 miles along the shore of the Firth of Clyde, from Kelly-burn on the north to Galloway-burn, which enters Loch-Ryan, on the south; its middle part, which is the broadest, extends about 20 miles across. It is bounded on the north and north-east by the county of Renfrew, on the east by the counties of Lanark and Dumfries, on the south-east by the stewardry of Kirkcudbright, and on the south by Wigtonshire. In figure the county resembles an elongated crescent, with its concavity presented to the sea. At the two ends the land is diminished almost to a point, being but a few miles in breadth. The superficial extent of the county comprises about 1,050 square miles of land, and six of lakes. It is divided into three principal or grand districts—Carrick, Cunningham, and Kyle. The first lies on the southern side of the Doon; the second comprehends the whole of the county north of the river Irvine, and Kyle division is situate between the rivers Doon and Irvine. The most fertile part of the shire is the great vale of Cunningham, which is comparatively level; Kyle possesses much valuable land towards the coast, but its interior lies high, and is a rough mountainous territory; Carrick is a hilly wild region throughout, and is only of value or interest in its northern angle, betwixt the rivers Doon and Girvan. In a general sense, the whole district of Ayrshire is shut out, on its eastern boundary, from the adjacent counties, by high ridgy land; and, with little variation, the surface inclines either to the sea, or to the rivers which flow in that direction. The sea-coast is mostly sandy, and indented with several excellent harbours. Abundance of sea weed is thrown on the shore, from which great quantities of kelp are annually made; and the coasts are admirably adapted for white fishing. In the rocks are several remarkable caves, worthy the inspection of the curious. To the south of Irvine stands the ancient castle of Dundonald, once a royal residence, and afterwards the family seat of the Cochrans, Earls of Dundonald.

This county was anciently inhabited by the British tribe called the Damii, a branch of the Celtic nation; who survived the period of the Roman yoke, and were, in the course of time, overrun by and amalgamated with the Scots-Irish from Kintyre. Ayrshire was the scene of perpetual turmoil during the wars of Bruce and Edward. The son of the first Bruce marrying the Countess of Carrick, became Earl of Carrick in her right; and it was their son who, on the expulsion of Baliol, formed pretensions to the throne, which he obtained by his courage, fortitude and prudence: thus Ayrshire possessed the honour of giving birth to the illustrious restorer of the Scottish monarchy. Some of the valorous exploits of Wallace, in supporting the national independence, were performed in this county.

PRODUCE, MANUFACTURES, MINERALS, &c.—It was not until about the middle of the 18th century that the inhabitants of Ayrshire began to discover and avail themselves of its capabilities as an agricultural district. The settlement, at this period, of Margaret Countess of London in Lorn castle, may be deemed the epoch of efficient improvement: by her great assiduity, precept and example, agriculture was promoted and encouraged; and in a short time the nobility and gentry of Ayrshire began in earnest to improve their estates upon systematic principles, under the skilful direction of intelligent stewards. Farmers were invited by them from the more southern shires, to instruct the tenantry in the management of land according to the most approved methods of the experienced agriculturist. Observing the peculiarities of the climate, and ascertaining the nature of the soil, the judicious culture of the various species of grasses became a primary object, and the general adoption of dairy farms was the natural consequence; this system has been persevered in, and the dairies in this district are superior, perhaps, to any others in Scotland: the value of their product in milk and butter is very considerable, and 'Dunlop' cheese is unrivalled throughout the country, finding a ready market wheresoever offered. The breed of cattle has likewise been much improved. As agriculture thus successfully progressed, excellent roads were formed, and these have recently been followed up by railways for the transmission of coals and heavy goods. From the fostered spirit of industry, and the enhanced value of land, resulted a corresponding exertion for the establishment of manufactures: the abundance of fuel—the plenty and cheapness of the necessaries of life, materials for building, and means of transit to the large towns in the adjacent shires—presented facilities for this purpose which were obvious and encouraging. The manufacture of stockings, carpets, cloths and bonnets extended generally, but Kilmarnock became most noted; at the capital of the county have been established dye-works, large iron-foundries, and steam-engine manufactories; at Catrine, well-known and extensive cotton-works; Cumnock is celebrated for its ingenious and beautiful snuff-boxes, as is Muirkirk for its ponderous ironworks. Ayrshire possesses inexhaustible coal-fields, freestone quarries, and ironstone mines, with several rich ores, particularly those of lead and copper; marble, gypsum and marl have been found, and black lead has been discovered; fireproof-stone and whetstone are obtained, and many petrefactions exist in various parts of the county. In the hills of Carrick are agates, porphyries, and other valuable fossils; and traces of antimony have not escaped the researching eye of the mineralogist.

RIVERS, LAKES, SPRINGS, &c.—In the ridge of hills which intersect the district of Carrick, almost all the rivers in the south of Scotland originate. The Tweed, the Esk, the Nith, the Annan, the Urr, and others, flow to the east and south; while the Stinchar, the Girvan, the Doon, the Ayr, and the Lugar, traverse the county, and pour their fruitful streams into the Irish channel. Besides these, the Irvine, and some smaller rivers, water the northern parts of Ayrshire. All these abound with salmon, trout, and other fresh-water fish. In the midst of so many minerals, a number of springs impregnated by their qualities are to be expected; and indeed almost every parish has its mineral water, though none have attained the dignity of spas. There are various inland lakes, particularly in Carrick—the most extensive being Loch Doon, from whence the Doon river flows.

The whole of Ayrshire was formerly comprehended in the bishopric of Glasgow; and it formed three deaneries, corresponding with the three divisions before mentioned. The county comprises 46 parishes, and two royal burghs—AYR and IRVINE. One member is returned to parliament for the shire; the contributory burghs (or those which, in conjunction with others, are represented in the senate), belonging to this county, are AYR, IRVINE, and KILMARNOCK.

The principal eminences are, Knock-Dolton, 930; Knock-Nouan, 1,540; Carleton, 1,554; Knock-Dow, 1,554; Cairntable, 1,650; and Knock-Dolian, 2,000 feet above the level of the sea.

TOTAL POPULATION OF AYRSHIRE . . . . .							84306	103954	127299	145100	60389

Note.—(a) The town of Saltcoats is partly in Ardrossan parish, and partly in that of Stevenston.
 (b) The villages of Troon and Shevalton, have since 1821 been legally detached from the parish of Irvine, and annexed to that of Dundonald—but in order to shew the increase in Irvine, the population of the villages (2516) in 1831, is added to that of Irvine (5200).

The total annual value of Real Property, in this county, as assessed in April, 1815, amounted to £409,983.

ARROSSAN,

A BATHING place advancing into celebrity, is in the parish of its name, pleasantly situate on the western shore of Ayrshire, on an accessible point of the coast, and only a mile west of Saltcoats, which occupies another promontory: it is 74 miles s. w. of Edinburgh, 30 s. w. of Glasgow, 25 s. s. w. of Paisley, and 8 w. by n. of Irvine. This place, though but yet in a state of infancy, bids fair to rival some of the longer established watering places, and has already become a favourite resort, in the bathing season, for the genteel families of Ayrshire and other places—who can be accommodated with neat and commodious houses or lodgings. It is chiefly indebted for its existence to the noble family of Eglintoun, who had formerly a castle of great strength and extent in the vicinity, but which is now in ruins. A large and elegant hotel, with a suite of warm and cold baths, was erected by the late Lord Eglintoun, at an expense of £10,000. The public rooms, the bed rooms, offices and stabling are most commodious. This establishment is conducted by Mr. Robert Young, in a manner highly creditable to himself, and satisfactory to its numerous visitants.

The harbour was commenced nearly thirty years ago, under the auspices of the before-named munificent patron, who expended nearly £90,000. upon it, and became the sole proprietor both of it and the town, as well as the extensive barony of Ardrossan.

POST OFFICE, Elizabeth Reid, Post Mistress.—Letters from SALTCOATS, IRVINE, KILMARNOCK, &c. arrive every morning at half-past nine, and are despatched every afternoon at three.

AYR,*THE BURGH OF NEWTON, THE PARISH OF ST. QUIVOX, & MONKTOWN WITH PRESTWICK.

AYR is a royal burgh, and the capital of the parish and shire of its name; 77 miles w.s.w. of Edinburgh, 33 s.s.w. of Glasgow, 34 s.s.w. of Paisley, 12 s.s.w. of Kilmarnock, and 11 s. of Irvine; situate in the north-west angle of the parish where the river of Ayr flows past it into the frith of Clyde. This border of Scotland has been inhabited from the earliest period of authentic history: for when, in the reign of Severus, the Roman fleet made the complete seaboard survey of Magna Britannica, this part of the coast was crowded with a population that evinced no amicable disposition towards the foreign intruder; subsequently, however, the persevering and insidious encroacher penetrated through southern Caledonia, and the Celtic harp was hushed by the fanning wings of the Roman eagle: accordingly we find that the site of modern Ayr retained, in the 11th century, the undoubted traces of a Roman station; and tradition informs us that a hamlet, the vestige of this station, was in existence until the latter part of the 12th century, when William, surnamed the Lion, erased the odious blot, and laid the foundation of a new town in the ashes of the former conqueror. A paramount interest, that every true Caledonian must feel, and the heart of every real patriot must warm, is excited by the recollection that here it was that the renowned William Wallace first openly embodied that hardy host which made the southron 'backward reel'; and that the powerful garrison of Edward I. was compelled to cower under his thunder arm. Ayr still retains some lineaments of antiquated grandeur, on which the lover of ancient lore may dilate with exquisite sensations; amongst others, his eye will single out the venerable tower of the church dedicated to St. John; and the traces of a fortress that comprised this edifice, erected during the protectorate of Cromwell, will not escape his observation. At a short distance, on the southern shore, is one of those uncouthly constructed square castles, so frequently arresting the notice of the stranger in this district, and exhibiting the ill-combined contrivances of aggression and defence; it stands on the summit of a rock overhanging the sea, and from a distance, has an imposing aspect. In the same direction, on a clear day, may be discerned the celebrated Ailsa Craig, rising 940 feet perpendicular out of the sea. The bay is very much admired, and some sea-travellers can perceive in its broad outline a resemblance to the bay of Naples. Immediately opposite, across the Clyde, is the isle of Arran, whose stupendous, and often cloud-capped, mountains present some features of the sublime and majestic, and whose summits are visible to the naked eye, in fine weather, from the headlands of Larne, in the county of Antrim, in Scotia's twin-sister land.

The town of Ayr forms a tolerably regular parallelogram, with one side presented to the left bank of the river, and the west end verging on the sea; the harbour extends up the river to about midway from the entrance to this part of the town. The burgh has been considerably improved of late years, and new buildings have arisen in every direction, many of them truly elegant. The splendid new Town Buildings, with perhaps the finest spire in Scotland, the height 219 feet were erected in the old Malt-cross, in 1828, at a cost of £10,000. These buildings contain a spacious suite of assembly-rooms and a public reading-room. Wellington-square may vie with many of those in the English metropolis, having a most noble erection to form the west side, in the new court-house and hall, built at the joint expense of the county and burgh, at a cost exceeding £30,000. The east front of this edifice, which is wholly of stone, is ornamented with an imposing portico. The centre of the square exhibits a fine lawn, and is enclosed with rails, and the surrounding houses are inhabited by the genteeler families of the place. At the back of the hall are two well arranged prisons, one for debtors, the other for felons; these have lately been remodelled after the system of the Glasgow bridge-well, so justly admired. In the hall are kept all the public offices and records for the town, and sessions and courts for the county and burgh are held.

An extensive trade is carried on in the export of coal from this place to Ireland. Mines of this article, as well as fine quarries of stone, abound in the neighbourhood. The other principal exports consist of iron, coal-tar, casks, lamp-black, and water of Ayr stone. Its imports comprise hides, tallow, barley, yarn, linen, spars, deals, and hemp. The convenience for shipping is superior to most of the towns on the coast, as the harbour has been lately much improved by carrying an extensive stone pier into the sea, affording a greater depth of water for vessels entering, and security when in the harbour. These improvements, with others in contemplation, will add considerably to the mercantile importance of the place, and repay the spirited projectors of this admirable design. A railway is projected between this town and Glasgow, which it is proposed shall communicate with the towns of Paisley, Johnston, Dalry, Kilwinning, Irvine, Kilmarnock, and Troon. The capital to be embarked is £550,000, subscribed for in eleven thousand shares of £50. each; the deposit upon each being £2. 10s. The shares are all taken up, and are now (1836) at a premium.

The civil government of Ayr was vested in a provost, two bailies, a dean of guild, a treasurer, and twelve councillors; but by the new bill for the regulation of municipal corporations, the burghs of Ayr, with Wallace Town and Newton, are united under a common magistracy and jurisdiction. Ayr is connected with the burgh of Irvine, in this county, and Campbeltown, Inverary, and Oban, in Argyshire, in returning a member to parliament. The present representative is Lord James Stuart. The total number of the county constituency is 3,913; that of the burghs 441. The county member is John Dunlop, esq. of Dunlop. The Earl of Glasgow is lord-lieutenant, and Sir D. H. Blair, baronet, vice-lieutenant of the county.

An academy, founded by subscription in 1798, stands foremost among the public establishments. It is conducted by a rector and five masters, with able assistants; the superintendance of the whole is vested in certain directors appointed by the crown, by which the seminary was created a body corporate. The useful and elegant accomplishments which may be attained in this establishment are the Latin, Greek, English, French, and Italian languages, writing, arithmetic, drawing, geography, navigation, mathematics, natural philosophy, and chymistry. The youth annually taught here are about five hundred in number; and the success which attends this institution, exceeds the most sanguine expectations of its original projectors. Ayr library, containing several thousand volumes, affords recreation to its numerous subscribers. There was also a mechanics' institution formed in 1825, which is now in a flourishing state; it has a library attached, containing more than two thousand volumes. There are other libraries of lesser note, and public reading-rooms in the town's buildings. Two talented and admirably conducted newspapers are published in Ayr weekly—the Observer, on Tuesday, and the Advertiser, on Thursday. Races are held here annually in the autumn. Two excellent packs of fox hounds, and one of harriers, hunt in the county; and in the town are spirited curling and howling clubs. A small but neat theatre occasionally opens to gratify the admirers of dramatic representations; but the inhabitants being generally of a sedate turn of mind, it is but little encouraged.

There are two churches of the establishment in the town, one in the parish of Newton, and another at Prestwick; the other places of worship in Ayr and its vicinity are for the associate synod congregation, the united associate synod, an English church, Wallace Town chapel, methodist, Moravian, independent, relief, and reform presbytery chapels, and one for the Roman catholics; some of these are situate in Wallace Town and Content, which see. The charitable institutions are numerous and liberally conducted: the poor are assisted from funds arising from lands and donations, and a dispensary gives medicine and surgical aid to the sick. Besides these there are a sailors' society, instituted in 1581; a merchants' society, established in 1655; a fund, formed in 1821, for decayed members, their widows, and orphans; the Ayr Sabbath school union society; and the Ayr universal society.

The celebrated Scottish bard, Robert Burns, was born about two miles and a quarter south-east of Ayr, in a small cottage, now converted into a public-house, about a quarter of a mile from which a very elegant monument has been erected to his memory; it is placed on the banks of the river Doon, amidst objects and scenery which had often inspired his muse. The locality of Tam O'Shanter lies in the immediate neighbourhood of the cottage. The Chevalier Ramsay, author of Cyrus's travels, &c. was a native of the town.

There are two weekly markets, Tuesday for grain and cattle, and Friday for the sale of dairy produce, poultry, and general business. Fairs are held on the Thursday and Friday before the second Wednesday in January; on the first Tuesday in April for black cattle, &c.; and the last Friday in April, the Thursday and Friday before the second Monday in July, and on the second Thursday and Friday in October.

NEWTON parish is divided from that of Ayr by the river, over which there is a handsome bridge of modern erection. Weaving is carried on here, for the Glasgow manufacturers, to a considerable extent; here are also four iron foundries, a salt-works, and the extensive ship building yards of Messrs. Cowan & Sloans'. The coals from the Ayr colliery are shipped on this side the harbour; the colliery is in the parish of St. Quivox, and, from the employment it furnishes to the industrious class, is of material importance to the neighbourhood.

ST. QUIVOX, a parish in the district of Kyle, lies on the banks of the Ayr river, and is bounded on the east by Torbolton, and on the west by Newton of Ayr and Monkton. The parish is nearly all arable, is finely enclosed, and beautified by plantations.

WALLACE TOWN, and a district called CONTENT, consists of a number of streets adjoining to Newton, and are both in the parish of St. Quivox. A new church of the establishment was erected in Content in 1834, and opened 8th March, 1836; it is a very handsome edifice, of the Gothic order; the site is well chosen, being in a populous neighbourhood, on the north-east bank of the river Ayr; it was built by subscription, at an expense of nearly £1,500, and has sittings for upwards of 800 persons. Nearly adjoining the new church is a new Roman catholic chapel, erected in 1826-7, at a cost of about £2,000; it is a chaste structure, in the Gothic style, fronted with freestone. In Wallace Town are also chapels belonging to the anti-burghers, the seccional congregation, the reformed presbytery, the independents, and the English church.

MONKTON, a parish in the district of Kyle, lies on the sea-coast, betwixt Symington and Dundonald on the north, and Newton and St. Quivox on the south. The parish formerly extended southward to the river Ayr, and comprehended the present parish of Newton, which was erected into a separate parochial district in the last century; it now includes the ancient and abrogated parish of Prestwick. The village of Monkton is situate on the high road to Glasgow, and distant four miles from Ayr. The small town or rather village of PRESTWICK, or Prestewick, is one mile and a half from Ayr. It was at one period a place of some consequence, having been created a burgh of barony at an early date; and its charter, which was renewed by James VI, in 1600, granted to it a weekly market and an annual fair; the former has fallen into disuse, from the proximity of its more thriving neighbour, Ayr. The market cross, which is of considerable antiquity, still exists; and it has its gaol and council-house; in the latter the bailies and freemen meet quarterly, to regulate the affairs of the burgh; and the Prince of Wales (when one exists) is recognized as the superior of the town. There has lately been erected here a handsome new church, for the accommodation of the inhabitants and those of Monkton.

BALLANTRAE

A SMALL sea-port village, in the parish of its name, is 105 miles s.w. from Edinburgh, 68 s.w. from Glasgow, 34 s. of Ayr, 24 N.E. of Portpatrick, 18 N. of Stranraer, 13 s. by w. of Girvan, and 25 s.w. of Maybole; situate near the south western extremity of the county, and on the banks of the river Stinchar, which here falls into the Frith of Clyde. It is principally supported by its fishery of salmon and cod-fish, and by the manufacture of coarse linen and plaids, in the weaving of which about fifty looms are employed; the salmon fishery belongs to the Earl of Stair. The approach to the town from Stranraer is over the river, across which is an excellent stone bridge of three well-proportioned arches. On the right, near the bridge, stand the ruins of Ard-Stinchar castle, which formerly belonged to the Hamilton family, and was inhabited by them about 160 years ago; the ancient clock, belonging to the tower now standing, is still used as the time-keeper for the town. Old Kirkcudbright kirk, now in ruins, gives a mournful yet pleasing effect to the surrounding scenery. The present kirk is a neat modern building, ornamented with stone, in the plain Gothic style. There are several schools in the parish, including Sunday, parochial, and private schools. In addition to his salary, the master of the parochial school enjoys the interest of £400. bequeathed for the education of the poor children of the parish. There are no resident magistrates; and the nearest court is held at Girvan, where small debts are recoverable only by summons. Ballantrae is without either fairs or weekly market, but there is an annual cattle show in the month of June.

POST OFFICE, John Millar, Post Master.—Letters from PORTPATRICK and GLASGOW arrive every day at half-past one, and are despatched to the South at the same hour.—Letters to the North are despatched every evening at six.

A SMALL neat village, lying on the banks of the rivers Gregg and Stinchar, is distant from Girvan 8 miles, and from Ayr 24; it contains a very neat church (of which the Rev. Ebenezer Bradshaw Wallace is the minister), a parochial school-house, and a subscription library. The greatest part of the parish is intersected by the river Gregg; and about a mile from the village are the ruins of old Kirk Dominae, where there is a living fair for servants on the first Saturday after the 26th May. Barr parish is principally sheep pasture; its extent, twelve miles by nine. The chief landed proprietors of the entire district are the Most Noble the Marquess of Ailsa and Sir James Ferguson.

BEITH AND NEIGHBOURHOOD.

BEITH is a market and post town, in the parish of its name and district of Cunningham; 62 miles v. by s. of Edinburgh, 1 3/4 s.w. of Glasgow, 11 s.w. of Paisley, 5 n. by e. of Dalry, 12 n. by e. of Saltcoats, and 8 s. by w. of Johnstone. It is situated near the confines of Renfrewshire, on an eminence commanding a fine and extensive view of the beautifully diversified country around, of which the Loch of Kilbirnie, at the distance of about a mile, forms a prominent feature. The town, which contains many excellent houses, but is very irregularly built, is of modern date, comprising at the commencement of the last century only a few very humble habitations; it is now a place of respectable trade, and its neighbourhood is the residence of many opulent families. Beith has been long noted for its manufacture of linen thread, of which great quantities are made both for home consumption and exportation. The manufacture of silk goods was formerly extensive, but it has been almost entirely superseded by that of cotton, in which the majority of the inhabitants are employed by the manufacturers of Paisley and Glasgow. The principal branches of trade, in addition to those already mentioned, are the manufacture of starch (for which there is a respectable establishment) lime burning, and the making of ropes, twine, bricks and tiles. The whole of the parish of Beith is enclosed and subdivided, and is almost all arable: the farms are small, and the tenants of this and the neighbouring parish of Dunlop may be said universally to make cheese, known by the name of

'Dunlop cheese,' which is held in as high estimation in Scotland as the cheese of Cheshire or Gloucestershire is in England. The value of this commodity sent annually to market from this parish has been calculated at upwards of £4,000. In the town are three branch banks, viz., the Commercial Bank of Scotland, the Glasgow Union Bank, and the Paisley Union; and there is an excellent inn, the 'Saracen's Head,' in Whang-street. In 1807 a very handsome church of the establishment, with a tower, was erected in the most elevated part of the town; its site is 343 feet above the level of the sea. The town-house was built by subscription in 1817, to the erection of which the late W. Wilson, of Crummock, was a liberal contributor: the upper part of the building contains a courtroom and other offices; the lower part consists of shops, the rents of which are applied to purposes of public benefit. The town is lighted with gas. The ladies' benevolent society is worthy of particular commendation, and there is an excellent parochial school.

At Giffen, a short distance from the town, is the stately ruined castle of the Montgomeries; there is also another ruin at Hazlehead; and at the top of Cuff-hill, a considerable eminence, is a druidical remnant, known by the name of 'Rocking-stone.' The neighbourhood of Beith produces coal, and abundance of limestone. The weekly market of the town is held on Friday; and there are annual fairs on the first Friday in January and February (old style), and on the 30th of August.

CATRINE IN SORN, AND MAUCHLINE.

CATRINE is a thriving manufacturing village in the parish of Sorn, 72 miles w. s. w. of Edinburgh, 32 s. of Glasgow, 14 E. by N. of Ayr, 12 s. w. of Kilmarnock, 5 from Old Cumnock, and 4 from Ochiltree; pleasantly situate nearly in the centre of the county, on the north bank of the river Ayr. This place has risen from insignificance to a considerable town. In 1787 its site contained only a blacksmith's shop and a meal mill, while its present population numbers nearly 3,000 persons. The cause of this surprisingly rapid increase is the erection of cotton works by the late Claud Alexander, Esq. of Ballochmye, who, having acquired a large fortune in the East Indies, purchased the land for the purpose of establishing works thereon, by which he might increase the value of his property here. But not understanding the cotton business himself, he formed a partnership with the late David Dale, merchant, of Glasgow, with whom he carried on the business until the 13th April, 1801, when it was entered upon by Messrs. James Finlay and Co., since which period the works have been very considerably increased. At first the spinning of cotton yarn for sale was carried on to a limited extent; but this has been greatly extended: nearly the whole is made into cloth by power looms, and about 60,000 yards are produced weekly, employing nearly 900 hands, besides many others in the process of bleaching, the works in which branch are considerable. It is impossible to speak in adequate terms of the excellent manner in which this extensive concern is conducted; for it not only gives employment, and, therefore, the means of support to the labouring classes, but the health and morals of every individual, in any way connected with it, are studied in a manner the most laudable to the proprietors. Schools, with efficient teachers, are provided, in which every branch of moral and useful instruction is imparted to about 200 of both sexes: there is also a sewing school in which the girls are taught needle-work, and to make articles of dress for their own use. A sabbath evening school has also been established, to which a library is attached, consisting of upwards of 500 volumes, and free sittings in the chapel are provided for those attending the school whose circumstances require gratuitous accommodation. The fears of the village have bought the chapel from Mr. Alexander, by whose father it was erected about forty years ago. A further proof of the prosperity of all around these works is, that most of the workmen have been able to purchase from the company the houses in which they live. The other principal trading establishments are two for the manufacture of a peculiar and beautiful description of snuff boxes. Sorn Castle, about a mile and a half from Catrine, once the seat of the Loudon family, is now the property and residence of Mrs. Somerville, who, with Miss Farquhar, Sir James Boswell, and Claud Alexander, Esq. are the principal heritors of the parish of Sorn—which abounds with coal, limestone, and ironstone. Dougal Stewart, Esq. the late celebrated professor of moral philosophy, in Edinburgh, was born in the neighbourhood of Catrine.

The parish of SORN, is bounded on the east by Muirkirk, on the south by Auchinleck, on the west by Mauchline, and on the north by Galston and Strathaven. The form of the parish is nearly square, measuring about six and a half miles each way: it formed a part of the extensive parish of Mauchline, till the year 1656: the parish church stands about three miles distant from that village. The land originally moorish, has been much improved and well inclosed; and there are fine plantations near the Ayr, which river runs through the parish, from east to west.

MAUCHLINE, a considerable village and capital of the parish of its name, 2½ miles from Catrine; is situated in a pleasant part of the county, and surrounded on all sides by a delightful country, interspersed with several elegant mansions. The buildings are neat and possess an air of pleasing variety. Mauchline Castle, the present residence of Alexander Hamilton, Esq., is an ancient building, well deserving the notice of the antiquarian. There are several excellent benevolent societies for the relief of sick members and poor widows, and a bible society has been, for a length of time, promoted with success. The parish school is well conducted and numerous attended. The weaving of cotton goods in this, as in all the towns of the neighbourhood, forms the principal support of the inhabitants. There is, however, besides, in the town, two considerable manufactories for snuff boxes, cigar cases, &c., (that belong to Messrs. W. and A. Smith enjoys the patronage of royalty), and a respectable branch of the Commercial Bank of Scotland. The parish is seven miles in length, and its extreme breadth is five miles. The Duke of Portland, Lord Glenlee, Sir James Boswell, and Claud Alexander, Esq. are the principal heritors.

Burns resided several years at Mossiel, a small farm, about half a-mile to the north of Mauchline, on the left side of the road from thence to Kilmarnock. The steading may still be seen environed by a few trees, as well as the fields, in traversing which, it is said, he composed some of his best poems. His chief resort, when he visited Mauchline, was the public-house, kept by John Dow, which still stands,—a thatched-house of two flats, nearly opposite the church-yard gate. The cottage of 'Ponnie Nansie', or Mrs. Gibson, the scene of the 'Jolly Beggars,' stands more immediately opposite the church-yard gate. Mauchline kirk, the scene of the 'Holy Fair,' was of the pure baron species. There is now an elegant new church, in the gothic style, with a steeple. In the surrounding cemetery may be seen the graves of the Rev. Mr. Auld, Nanse Tinnock, and several other persons who figure in the satires of Burns; and on the banks of the Ayr, at a short distance from Mauchline, is the scene of some of the bard's more pleasing poems, his lyrics particularly.

IS a small village in the parish of its name, 100 miles from Edinburgh, 32 from Ayr, and 5 from Ballantrae; situate on the north bank of the Stinchar, a stream famed for its salmon and trout. In the village is a parochial school, a boarding-school for boys, and an anti-burghers' meeting-house; there is also with in the parish a Cameronian place of worship. The extent of this district is 20 miles in length by 9 broad;
it is composed of good pasture, and ndergoing great improvements. There are in all 23 inheritors, but the chief part is the property of the Duke and Dutchesse
de Coigny, Sir William Fettes, the Marquess of Ailsa,

Dr. Hamilton, and Mr. Thomas Kennedy, of Dunure
The picturesque ruins of Craigneil, Kirkhill, Rockdo-lean, Pinwherry, Knockdaw, and Carleton Castles, are to be seen in this parish, which also abounds in lime.
It is bounded on the north and west by the mouth of the Clyde. The nearest approximation for persons desirous of visiting the far-famed Ailsa Craig is from Lendlefoot, in this neighbourhood. Fairs are held here on the first Monday in the months of February, May, August, and November, old style; there are also four quarterly cattle-markets at the village of Barrhill, seven miles distant, in this parish.

CUMNOCK AND AUCHINLECK.

CUMNOCK (or OLD CUMNOCK) is a considerable village of thoroughfare; 60 miles s.w. of Edinburgh, 16 e. of Ayr, and the like distance s.e. of Kilmarnock;
situate on a line of road between Dumfries on the south-east and Glasgow on the north, 44 from the former town and 38 from the latter. The village, which is of an irregular triangular form, is seated in a deep sheltered hollow, at the confluence of the Glis-nock and Logan waters; it is celebrated for the manufacture of those beautiful wooden snuff boxes, a species of trade which originated here nearly thirty years since, and, with some few exceptions, as Lawrencekirk, Catrine, and Mauchline, is still confined to Cumnock. This branch furnishes employment to a considerable number of men, women, and children, all of whom get more wages by their ingenious labour
than most other artisans; and a good deal of money is thus caused to flow through and enrich the town.
Plane tree is the wood used in the manufacture, and great ingenuity is evinced in adorning the lids with devices, which is chiefly performed by boys: the very nice manner in which the hinges are constructed is admirable, and although, in this part of the box, many imitations have been attempted, all have failed to rival the original manufacture.

The places of worship are a church of the establishment, and one of the united secession. To the parochial school, which is well attended, the sum of £25.
annually was left by Charles Duncan, esq. late merchant of London, and a native of Cumnock; the Marquess of Bute also allows the master a salary for educating twenty poor children of this parish, and pays the schoolmasters of New Cumnock and Ochiltree for the instruction of ten children in their respective parishes. The principal part of the town occupies the site of what was formerly the church-yard; the present cemetery was, at one period, the place of execution, and contains the remains of three persons who were shot on the spot, in 1685, by a party of Highlanders, for their adherence to the covenanted work of reformation; and the corpse of Peden, a martyr of the covenanting body, who died in the parish of Sorn, was exhumed, by a party of dragoons, after being interred six weeks, and ignominiously buried at the gallows foot. An establishment of the Ayrshire Banking Company, and two savings' banks, are in the town; the first was opened in 1831, to which Messrs. Crawford and Nichol are the treasurers; the other in 1835, to which M. Campbell is treasurer. There are also two libraries, viz.—the 'Cumnock library,' established in 1792 by shareholders, and the 'Cumnock new public library,' formed in 1832. The castle of Terrenzean, now in ruins, is in the neighbourhood—it gives the title of baron to the family of Dumfries. The market is held on Thursday, and the fairs on the fourth Thursday after Candlemas, and on the Wednesday succeeding the last Tuesday in May, the Wednesdays after the first Tuesday in July, and after the third Tuesday in October, all old style.

AUCHINLECK (pronounced Affleck) signifying a field of rock, is a respectable village in the parish of its name,  $\frac{1}{2}$  mile from Cumnock, 3 from Sorn, and the like distance from Catrine. Like Cumnock, many are employed in the manufacture of snuff boxes, and others in weaving and sewing muslins for the Glasgow houses. The parish, which is 18 miles in length, by only about two in breadth, is watered on its northern extremity by the Ayr, and by the Lugar on the south. Coal and limestone are produced here, but the soil is for the most part mossy and unproductive. The places of worship are a church of the establishment, and one belonging to the burghers; there is also a parochial school. The ruins of Auchinleck castle stand in an angle formed by the Dupol burn and the Lugar; and in the neighbourhood is the Place of Auchinleck, a handsome mansion, erected in the last century by Lord Auchinleck, senator of the college of justice, and father of the eminent and amiable James Boswell, Esq., the friend and biographer of Johnson; the house is still the property of the Boswell family. A well-attended fair, for the sale of lambs, is held annually on the last Tuesday in August.

POST OFFICE, CUMNOCK, Andrew Ranken, Post Master.—Letters from EDINBURGH and GLASGOW arrive every morning at nine, and are despatched every forenoon at eleven.—Letters from SANQUHAR and NEW CUMNOCK arrive every morning at half-past eight, and are despatched every morning at half-past nine.—Letters from England arrive every afternoon at five, and are despatched to Douglas Mill every evening at 7.

POST, AUCHINLECK, Receiving house at Janet Dalrymple's.—Letters from LONDON arrive every afternoon at half-past four, and are despatched every evening (to SORN) at half-past seven.—Letters (excepting the LONDON) arrive every morning at nine, and are despatched every afternoon at five.

DAILY

IS a village, in the parish of its name, and district of Carrick; 93 miles s.w. of Edinburgh (through Maybole and Ayr), 47 s. by w. of Glasgow, 46 N.N.E. of Portpatrick (by the new road, which is longer by three miles than along the coast), 37 N.N.E. of Stranraer, 30 s. by w. of Kilmarnock, 19 N.N.E. of Ballantrae, 15 s. by E. of Ayr, 7 from Maybole, and 6 from Girvan. The situation of this village is not exceeded by any in the county for beauty; it is seated in a fine fertile valley, near to the pellucid water of the Girvan, which is fed by a number of small streams, some of them descending through deep and woody glens, admired for their picturesque and romantic loveliness; while the many elegant mansions of the affluent that are interspersed throughout the district, and the hoary ruins of two ancient castles, contribute to the general interest of the scenery. The extent of the parish is six miles in length by about five in breadth: the uplands are bleak and pastoral; but the more level parts are well cultivated, enclosed and planted. Coal and limestone abound in several portions of the parish. The Duke and Duchess de Coigny, Sir James Ferguson, and Sir John Andrew Cathcart, are the principal heritors.

The old parish church, dedicated to St. Michael, has fallen to decay; the present structure, which is neat, was erected in 1766. A parochial, and a Sunday school, for the children of the poor, have been established in the parish; and there are two libraries, supported by subscription, in the village.

DALMELLINGTON,

A BURGH of barony, is 72 miles s.w. from Edinburgh, 49 s. of Glasgow, 42 N.W. of Dumfries, 24 s.s.e. of Kilmarnock, 15 s.e. of Ayr, 14 E. of Maybole, 12 s. of Old Cumnock, and 6 to the eastward of Straiton. This thriving little place is pleasantly situate on the north bank of the water of Doon, and near to the base of an eminence, from the summit of which a fine view is obtained of a varied character, comprising rude and lofty mountains and the softer features of cultivation. The manufacture of carpets, blankets and plaiding, and the weaving of cotton goods, together with the coal-mines in the neighbourhood, furnish employment to many of the industrious class. These mines are at present leased to Mr. Wm. Sloss, of the 'Cross Keys,' a very comfortable Inn here; the coal, which is obtained by an exceedingly simple method, is sold at the low price of 2s. 4d. per ton. Besides the trading importance enjoyed by the town, it derives some advantage from the resort of parties of pleasure and for fishing; those who intend to partake of the latter amusement will find on the banks of Loch Doon neat boats, furnished by the proprietors of the two good

Inns at this place, the 'Cross Keys' and the 'Black Bull.' The loch is a beautiful sheet of water, with a hard rocky shore, extending six miles in length, and abounding in trout of fine flavour. On an island in the lake are the remains of Balloch castle. Some years since a fishing-party discovered, at the bottom of the loch, what appeared to be boats; and having obtained the necessary assistance, they succeeded in raising three canoes—the largest measuring 24 feet in length by 4 in breadth, and hewn out of a solid log of oak; two were much decayed, but the third was so little impaired as
